FOREWORD

1. The United Nations Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea, Office of Legal Affairs, has prepared the present compilation to complete the series of publications dealing with the practice of States in relation to subject-matters covered by the Convention. ^{1/}

2. This compilation contains the national legislation of States on the territorial sea, the right of innocent passage in the territorial sea and the contiguous zone. This legislation is based on concepts enshrined in customary law, codified in the Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone, done at Geneva on 29 April 1958 (hereinafter referred to as "the 1958 Convention") and redefined by the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, done at Montego Bay, Jamaica, on 10 December 1982 (hereinafter referred to as "the Convention").

3. The United Nations has in the past prepared comprehensive compilations on the national legislation of States relating to these subjects (United Nations Legislative Series references ST/LEG/SER.B/6, ST/LEG/SER.B/15, ST/LEG/SER.B/16, ST/LEG/SER.B/18, ST/LEG/SER.B/19). The last compilation prepared is previous to the adoption of the Convention. It was thus necessary to publish a new compilation in order to reflect the degree of acceptance by States through their national laws of the legal regime established by the Convention.

4. Although the concept of "baseline" is defined in Part II of the Convention ("Territorial sea and contiguous zone", articles 5 to 14), a survey of State practice as regards baselines has already been published. ^{2/} Consequently, legislation on baselines is not included in the present compilation. The reason for the separate treatment of the legislation on baselines stems from the fact that from the baselines not only the breadth of the territorial sea (article 3 of the Convention) and of the contiguous zone (article 33, paragraph 2, of the Convention) are measured, but also the breadth of other areas defined in the Convention, such as the exclusive economic zone (article 57) and the continental shelf (article 76).

5. An examination of this series of national maritime legislation 12 years after the opening for signature of the Convention and at the time of its entry into force on 16 November 1994 shows a widespread acceptance of the rights and obligations contained therein.

6. As of December 1994, out of 151 coastal States, 117 have established a 12-mile territorial sea, and 11 more States have set their outer limits to less than 12 miles. Thus, 128 States have adopted limits in conformity with the Convention.

7. As regards the contiguous zone, 46 States have established a contiguous zone of a breadth of 24 miles, and 8 more States have claimed a contiguous zone of less than 24 miles. All but one of the 53 States that have established a contiguous zone have done so in conformity with the Convention. The 1958 Convention has been in force since 10 September 1964; 49 States are parties to it. The relationship between both legal regimes is established by article 311, paragraph 1, of the Convention: "This Convention shall prevail, as between States Parties, over the Geneva Conventions on the Law of the Sea of 29 April 1958." States that are parties to both Conventions shall apply the regime of the 1982 Convention. Thus the 1958 Convention shall remain applicable for the States which are parties to it but not yet parties to the 1982 Convention.

8. It must be stressed that the widespread acceptance by the international community of most of the rules relating to the territorial sea and the contiguous zone as defined by the Convention has contributed to the establishment of rules of customary international law in relation to the regime applicable to these marine areas.

I. THE TERRITORIAL SEA

The territorial sea is a marine space over which coastal States exercise sovereignty. This sovereignty extends to an adjacent belt of sea described as the territorial sea, to the airspace over the territorial sea as well as to its bed and subsoil. However, the need of international navigation has placed some limits on the power of the coastal States.

A. Establishment of the limits

10. Whereas the 1958 Convention and other previous attempts failed to establish a limit to the breadth of the territorial sea (article 6 of the 1958 Convention), the 1982 Convention succeeded in establishing a 12-mile limit to this breadth, this being indeed a significant contribution of the Convention to the international law of the sea. Article 3 of the Convention gives coastal States the right to establish a territorial sea the breadth of which may extend up to a line not exceeding 12 nautical miles from the baselines determined in accordance with the Convention.

11. Articles 5 to 14 set out the conditions for drawing baselines and the publicity to be given to them.^{3/} These rules follow the provisions of the 1958 Convention with some exceptions, dealing with specific geographical features such as the presence of a delta (article 7, paragraph 3).

12. The rule for the delimitation of the territorial sea between States with opposite or adjacent coasts is contained in article 15. This provision is almost identical to article 12 of the 1958 Convention. The solution of the median line, except when otherwise agreed or if there is a historic title or other special circumstance, is at variance with the solution offered by the Convention in the case of the delimitation of the exclusive economic zone (article 74, paragraph 1) and of the continental shelf (article 83, paragraph 1).

13. Article 16 imposes on coastal States the obligation to show on charts or, alternatively, by lists of geographical coordinates, the straight baselines and the lines of delimitation drawn by the State. The State shall give due publicity to such charts and lists of geographical coordinates and shall deposit a copy of each such chart or list with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. This provision encompasses a new set of responsibilities given to the Secretary-General.

^{3/} For an analysis of these rules, please refer to Baselines: An Examination of the Relevant Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea, 1989 (United Nations publication, Sales No. E.88.V.5).
