Research Abstract

To implement international marine environment standards and regulations in Peru

The paper is to propose a model of a National Policy for Ocean and Maritime Affairs that may allow Peru's Government to implement major international marine environmental standards and regulations under the framework of the 1982 United Nations Law of the Sea Convention and other related international environmental Conventions.

It is a topic of great importance to the Peruvian Government. Furthermore it is to enhance that Peru has an environmental legal framework system, which involves different sectors of Government and the General Directorate and Captaincies and Coast Guard is responsible for preventing the pollution of the marine environment in Peru. The proposed research will also contribute in the drafting or formulation of a National Policy for the management of ocean and maritime issues and this will guide the Peruvian State in the implementation of International Conventions.
