WHY WE SHOULD CARE ABOUT LONG-TERM CARE

THURSDAY, 7 DECEMBER 2017 | 1.30 - 2.30 PM
17-50 CONFERENCE ROOM, 17TH FLOOR | UN WOMEN, 220 E. 42ND ST.

In the context of rapid population ageing, long-term care (LTC) for older people has become an urgent issue for gender equality and human rights everywhere, but policy responses have been slow—putting the well-being both older people and their caregivers in jeopardy.

Isabella Aboderin is Head of the Aging and Development Unit at the African Population and Health Research Center (APHRC) in Nairobi, Kenya. Isabella holds a PhD from the School for Policy Studies from the University of Bristol, UK and has more than 15 years of experience working on issues of ageing in sub-Saharan Africa.

Peter Lloyd-Sherlock is a Professor of Social Policy and International Development at the University of East Anglia and Visiting Professor at Cornell University. Peter is currently leading projects on health interventions for older people in Ghana and South Africa and on long-term care in Argentina.

Ito Peng is a Professor of Sociology and Public Policy at the Department of Sociology, University of Toronto. Ito has written extensively on gender and social policies in East Asia. Her most recent book, co-edited with Sonya Michel, Gender, Migration and the Work of Care was published in 2017.
