Strategy for the period 2008-2011 for the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime***

A. Strategy for the period 2008-2011

1. The mission of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime is to contribute to the achievement of security and justice for all by making the world safer from crime, drugs and terrorism.

2. The present strategy translates this vision into a platform for action. It is based on the existing mandates of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and links them to results and does not represent a modification of these mandates. The strategy grew out of extensive consultations with all the stakeholders of the Office.

3. It is built on five premises:

(a) Crime, drugs and terrorism are universal challenges. Effective responses to these threats include national, regional and international responses, based on the principle of shared responsibility;

(b) The United Nations helps define these international responses; becomes custodian of the relevant international legal instruments when adopted; facilitates international cooperation; keeps the world informed about how the problem in question is evolving; and assists Member States, when requested, in building domestic capacity and in translating the multilateral standards into national practice;

(c) An important part of the established mandates of the Office is to facilitate the ratification and implementation of the relevant international conventions on crime, drugs and terrorism;

(d) The Office has a comparative advantage to contribute, in compliance with its mandates, to this multilateral response, in particular, in offering:

(i) Normative services: facilitating the effective implementation of existing international legal instruments and their transformation into global norms and, where appropriate, facilitating negotiation of international legal instruments;

(ii) Research and analysis;

(iii) Technical assistance: assisting Member States, upon request, in signing and ratifying relevant international legal instruments and facilitating implementation of these instruments; and providing Member States, upon request, with legislative assistance and facilitating national capacity-building, inter alia, in the area of multilateral standards and norms;

(e) These services must be consistent with, and indeed contribute to, the wider efforts of the United Nations towards peace, security and development.

* Also adopted by the Council in its resolution 2007/19.

4. The strategy responds to the following needs, expressed by the many different stakeholders of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime:

(a) The need for more stable, predictable and sufficient funding. Currently 12 per cent (16.1 million United States dollars) of the Office's annual budget of 135.9 million United States dollars comes from the regular budget of the United Nations. The remaining 88 per cent comes from voluntary contributions of Member States to two separate trust funds. Most of these contributions are earmarked. Although the increase in earmarked contributions represents a vote of confidence in the Office by Member States, it creates an unstable and unpredictable funding situation, making it difficult to plan even one year ahead. The Office must grow to respond to the greater demand for its services. The resources provided to the Office should be commensurate with the mandates and the tasks entrusted to it;

(b) Given the wide array of mandates, the need to operationalize results within the established mandates of the Office and in conformity with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning;

(c) The need to find the right mix of normative, analytical and operational functions within the mandates of the programmes of the Office. While it is clear that the Office must do all three, the specific mix will vary according to time and place, and to the particular issue being addressed. As custodian of the relevant international treaties and with its accumulated in-house expertise, the Office has a comparative advantage in helping Member States translate international legal commitments into operational standards and norms;

(d) The need to improve horizontal integration. The interrelationship between drugs, crime and terrorism should be reflected, where appropriate and in accordance with established mandates of the Office, in the work of the Office in the provision of technical assistance;

(e) The need to balance expertise between headquarters and the field. Expertise and presence in the field should be increased, with due regard to project activity, through, among others, various arrangements in partnership with other United Nations entities, while maintaining optimal staffing levels at headquarters;

(f) The need to specify the results to be achieved, and the resources required for this, to carry out effective programme delivery and to produce these concrete results. The consolidated biennial budget should become a real tool for the planning and use of human and financial resources required for the effective implementation of the programmes. The Office should be accountable for delivering results and all Member States should be able to see how funds are being spent.

5. The strategy of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime for the period 2008-2011 responds to the needs outlined above and is a joint undertaking of all the stakeholders of the Office. This joint undertaking applies both to the formulation of this strategy, which has been done, and to its implementation. The means to secure the involvement of all stakeholders in the implementation is the consolidated biennial budget, in full compliance with relevant General Assembly resolutions and financial rules and regulations.

6. In support of the strategy, which will be reflected in the strategic framework and the consolidated biennial budget, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime will develop an implementation plan as an internal managerial tool, which will show:

- (a) How each concrete result specified in the strategy will be achieved;
- (b) How much it will cost;
- (c) Where each activity will be carried out (country, region, world);
- (d) Who (in terms of work units) will be responsible for it;
- (e) Which projects will contribute to achieving it;
- (f) What performance indicators will be used to measure its achievement.

7. Actions under this strategy contribute towards the protection and empowerment of those most vulnerable, in particular women and children, and to securing their lives, livelihoods and dignity.<sup>3</sup>

Scientific and forensic findings enrich policy and trend analysis by providing the basis for accurate information in specific areas.

17. Addressing drug abuse and illicit drug production requires a shared responsibility. Prevention, reduction and the elimination of the cultivation of illicit drug crops are integral to achieving sustainable development and require special policies and greater efforts on the part of all Member States. In this regard, alternative development, an important component of a balanced and comprehensive drug control strategy, is intended to create a supportive environment for the implementation of that strategy by contributing in an integrated way to the eradication of poverty, thus contributing to the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals.<sup>7</sup>
