

Sport for Food is a global organization mobilizing people around the world through sport as a vehicle for social change in order to raise food, funds, and awareness for local food banks and the global fight against hunger.

Sport for Food aims to mobilize communities locally across the world in an endeavor to empower and activate concerned citizens and people looking to create change. The platform is created and rooted in people's ability to create change no matter where they are, and through their passion for sport.

Sport for Food is the parent of Five Hole for Food (street hockey), Footy for Food (street football) and Hoops for Food (street basketball) using the world's three most popular sports in order to create a legacy of giving back in the community by engaging millennials in a giving experience rather than simply soliciting donations and creating disengaged donors.

The Zero Hunger Challenge represents the opportunity to educate, mobilize, and inspire people to look at the global issue of hunger. While Sport for Food operates locally in cities, the movement that is gaining global momentum is rooted in the common theme and passion for sport which transcends the obstacles of culture and language. In the same manner than hunger has no obstacles and is globally prevalent, we strive to continue our fight against hunger through the collective impact of many communities and the long lasting effect of engaged citizens.