In 2013, there were 28.2 million international migrants aged 15 to 24 in the world, accounting for one-eighth of the 232 million international migrants worldwide.\(^1\)

The proportion of young migrants is higher in developing countries than in developed countries, while the proportion of girls and young women who migrate is higher in developed countries than developing countries.\(^2\)

Drivers of Youth Migration

Young people migrate for a plethora of reasons. The decision to migrate is often related to important life transitions, such as obtaining higher education, finding and starting work, or getting married. With some 71 million youth unemployed globally in 2016\(^4\) the search for work continues to be significant driver of youth migration in both developed and developing countries.

Many youth also choose or are forced to migrate to escape poverty, violence, conflict, or are displaced due the effects of war or climate change. As such, youth are heavily represented in migration for humanitarian reasons, including as refugees, asylum-seekers and as unaccompanied minors.

Impacts of Youth Migration

Internal or international migration can have a positive impact on young people by opening up new opportunities, a path to participate in higher education, a better and decent job, a chance to gain professional experience or to pursue personal development, by building self-confidence, and allowing them to acquire skills and competencies beneficial to themselves and their countries and communities of origin as well as destination.

However, for some young people, especially young women and those in irregular situations\(^5\), the migration process confronts them with particular challenges and confers to them certain vulnerabilities. These vulnerabilities include discrimination based on gender, migration status, and country of origin.

---

\(^1\) Global Migration Group: Migration and Youth 2014 http://www.globalmigrationgroup.org/sites/default/files/0_Cover_and_Acknowledgements_%281%29.pdf
\(^3\) The International Organization on Migration describes irregular migration as ‘Movement that takes place outside the regulatory norms of the sending, transit and receiving countries’.
ethnicity or religion; poor working conditions (often exacerbated by the relatively low levels of bargaining power and trade union membership among young migrant workers compared to their adult counterparts); lack of access to basic social services such as health; risks associated with sexual and reproductive health; and lack of social protection or loss of social protection entirely once the migration status of the young migrant changes (from student to graduate, for example). Therefore, the migration experience can end up representing either an opportunity or a risk for young people and can either lead to their development or the very opposite, depending on policies and measures supporting them.

Effective Policy Development
Strong, evidence based migration and youth policies are the cornerstone of ensuring that the benefits and opportunities of youth migration are fully harnessed. Legislation, policies and administrative regulations that affect young migrants should comply with international obligations under international human rights, labour, and refugee law.

Promoting cooperation at all levels - local, national, regional and international – as well as strengthening meaningful youth participation in the migration policy debate and programmes will be critical to managing migration to harness the development potential of youth migration while mitigating associated risks.

Agenda 2030 and Youth Migration
Addressing migration opportunities and challenges is central to achieving sustainable economic and social development.

Population growth trends across the world – below replacement level fertility rates in most destination or developed countries, ageing migrant populations and the youth bulge in most developing countries - reflects the relevance of youth migration and young migrants in sustaining and promoting inclusive economic growth and sustainable development in the years to come.

The positive contribution of migrants for sustainable development is recognized in the UN’s newly adopted development framework, Agenda 2030 and its Sustainable Development Goals. Through this mechanism Member States have agreed to “ensure safe, orderly and regular migration involving full respect for human rights and the humane treatment of migrants regardless of migration status, of refugees and of displaced persons”.

In September 2016 the United Nations held for the first time a High Level Summit on addressing large flows of refugees and migrants providing member states with a historic opportunity to come up with a blueprint for a better international response and to bolster efforts towards the achievement of the SDGs.

The 2013 UN DESA World Youth Report on youth migration was prepared to offer a multidimensional account of the life experiences of young migrants and young people affected by migration.

Further Reading
United Nations General Assembly 71st Session High Level Summit on Migration and Refugees http://www.refugeesmigrants.un.org

Migration and Youth Challenges and Opportunities, Global Migration Group 2014 http://www.globalmigrationgroup.org/migrationandyouth

World Youth Report: Youth and Migration, UNDESA www.unworldyouthreport.org

http://undesadspd.org/Youth.aspx facebook.com/UN4Youth twitter.com/UN4Youth

This Issue Brief was prepared by the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs (UNDESA) and is part of a collaborative effort of the United Nations Inter-agency Network on Youth Development, coordinated by UNDESA.