I. Response to recommendations from the sixth session addressed exclusively to UNICEF

Promoting, disseminating and implementing the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples¹

1. UNICEF TACRO (Regional Office for Latin America and the Caribbean), in partnership with the OHCHR and the Secretariat of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (SPFII) organized a regional meeting between the Advisory Group of Indigenous Leaders and the UN system in Latin America and the Caribbean. The meeting was held in Quito, Ecuador, to discuss a joint plan of action for the dissemination and strengthening of collaboration regarding the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and Programme of Action of the Second Decade of Indigenous Peoples. The meeting was attended by eleven representatives of United Nations regional agencies.
2. As a result of the meeting, a member of the Advisory Group of Indigenous Leaders, with UNICEF support, participated in a consultation of UN Regional Directors in Chile and gave a presentation on the Declaration, as well as on the conclusions and recommendations of the Quito meeting.
3. UNICEF TACRO is supporting the translation of the Declaration into 15 indigenous languages; child friendly versions in Ecuador and Costa Rica (this will be used as a basis for versions in other countries); and a publication with ILO (with the Convention No.169). These different translations are being coordinated with the Fondo Indígena.

4. UNICEF is also supporting national plans of action for the empowerment of indigenous peoples and building State institutions' capacities regarding the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

Indigenous peoples in voluntary isolation and initial contact²

5. In Paraguay, UNICEF has supported the Ayoreo organization Totobiegosode Organizacion Payipi ichadie (OPIT) and an NGO to supply a rain water system and sanitation to Totobiegosode communities whose inhabitants were in voluntary isolation until 2004. It has also supported the health system in order to expand health care services to those communities.

Share experience in health programming for indigenous peoples with other relevant UN agencies working in the field³

6. A national consultation for the improvement of the quality of life of indigenous peoples of Congo Brazzaville took place in November 2007 at the initiative of the Government of Congo, and with the support of UNICEF. More than 80 participants (indigenous leaders, NGOs , French embassy, World Bank, UNESCO, UNHCR, European Union etc.) including key stakeholders participated in this meeting. During this consultation the main priorities of a national plan of action to address the situation of indigenous peoples as well as the institutional coordination mechanisms for the plan of action were adopted. The national plan of action includes three strategic areas: 1) Development of basic social services culturally adapted to indigenous populations, 2) Increase in resources (financial and human) and capacity building of indigenous community organizations, particularly the national network of indigenous peoples of Congo, 3) Establishment and adoption of a legislative framework protecting the rights of indigenous peoples. In addition, the national plan of action includes a strategy aimed at reinforcing regional cooperation in order to obtain an efficient and unified response in the West and Central African region.

7. Other countries, including Bolivia, Ecuador, Peru and Malaysia, have supported the training of traditional birth attendants (TBAs) and health service agents. In Malaysia UNICEF supported training of primary health care workers, TBAs and traditional healers working at district level.

Support free and universal civil registration on the basis of free, prior and informed consent of indigenous peoples⁴

8. UNICEF, with support from the Government of Spain, encouraged the active participation of many indigenous leaders from 12 LAC (Latin America and the Caribbean) countries in the Regional Conference on Birth Registration organized by UNICEF, OAS and Plan International in August 2007 in Asunción, Paraguay. It was an important event to make civil registrar institutions aware of the problems and obstacles affecting indigenous children and adolescents on this matter. It was also a great opportunity to empower indigenous representatives with information on the importance of birth registration. The final documents encompassed most of the recommendations made by indigenous leaders.

9. UNICEF is also developing a study with Plan International on good practices and lessons learned on birth registration of indigenous peoples in four countries of LAC: Guatemala, Panama, Ecuador and Bolivia.

⁴ Ibid, para. 66.

10. In Congo Brazzaville, UNICEF organized a registration campaign of indigenous children. Some of the activities carried out include advocacy, the provision of a registry, the establishment of community networks, sensitization of parents as well as the facilitation of birth registration (2000 birth certificates have been delivered since the beginning of these activities).

Half-day discussion on urban indigenous peoples and migration⁵

11. UNICEF and FLACSO (Facultad Latino-americana de Ciencias Sociales) organized a panel on International Migration and Indigenous Peoples in October 2007 in Quito, Ecuador, in the context of a regional congress on Social Sciences. As a result of the meeting more in depth studies on the consequences of migration on children and women will be developed.

12. In Peru, UNICEF is supporting a study on the impact of urban migration of indigenous people to Lima.

Include urban and migrant indigenous women and children in relevant studies on violence against women⁶

13. In Congo Brazzaville, UNICEF developed with the participation of indigenous women a situation analysis. Indigenous women participated also in the survey assessing their knowledge, behavior, as well as customs and practices with respect to the prevention of HIV and AIDS and access to basic social services (February 2007) . They were also fully involved in the preparation of a study on indigenous women and children in Congo (conducted in June 2007).

II. Response to recommendations addressed to one or more agencies or to the UN system in general

Expert group meeting on indigenous languages⁷

14. UNICEF has supported the participation of indigenous experts in the meeting organized by the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Languages on the occasion of the International Year of Languages. Many UNICEF country offices support intercultural bilingual education programmes. It is important to highlight the work of the EIBAMAZ programme in the Amazonian areas of Peru, Ecuador and Bolivia in several languages with the support of the Finnish Government. UNICEF, with funding from the Government of Spain, is also supporting the development of an Ethno-linguistic Atlas for the LAC countries, with a special focus on those indigenous peoples living across borders in two or more countries.

Implementation of the human rights-based approach to development⁸

15. The reference to the importance of the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in UNICEF's work was enriched and completed by the adoption of the 1998 Executive Directive on Human rights based approach, underlying UNICEF's commitment to help shape a human development agenda built on human rights principles. According to this approach, all UNICEF Country Offices should help articulate the claims of the vulnerable or excluded population and/or groups, and draw attention to their rights through advocacy with decision makers or through social mobilization. When supporting national and local planning efforts, UNICEF Offices should ensure attention to the rights of vulnerable and excluded children, and the identification of accountabilities and necessary actions. Any activity undertaken by UNICEF should be designed, implemented, and evaluated with the participation of rights holders.

⁷ Ibid, para. 72.

Use and further refine existing indicators to measure the situation of indigenous and tribal peoples⁹

16. Several UNICEF country offices in the LAC are advocating for disaggregated data. The MICS (Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey) in five countries in the Caribbean included ethnic and/or racial variables and are now being used for disparity analysis.

Recommendations to Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean through its Centre for Latin American Demography – Population Division¹⁰

17. In Latin America, UNICEF and CELADE are planning to organize a meeting to improve the identification of indigenous peoples in the upcoming 2010 round of censuses. Indigenous experts will share lessons learned with representatives from national statistics institutions and advocate for better questions, and other UN agencies have expressed interest to collaborate on this initiative.

III. Addressing issues of special interest to the Permanent Forum

A. Indigenous children and youth

18. UNICEF's mandate is to ensure that the rights of each and every child are respected and fulfilled everywhere, without any form of discrimination. As the first human rights treaty expressly making reference to indigenous issues, the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC) provides the norm that guides UNICEF's activities in this area. The Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) also provides guidance for UNICEF's activities.

19. UNICEF TACRO supported a review by indigenous leaders of the Draft General Comment on article 30 “on Indigenous Children” of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, with the participation of the CRC Committee member from Latin America.

20. In Brazil, UNICEF supported the National Meeting of Adolescents and Indigenous Youth, as part of the second meeting of the ‘People of the Forests’, wherein 45 adolescents gathered in Brasília to present their claims to their rights.

Early childhood

21. Early childhood development programmes are a part of UNICEF programming for indigenous people in Brazil, Surinam (Caribbean Area Office), Namibia, Paraguay, Peru and Venezuela. UNICEF supports basic services for indigenous people in countries such as Bolivia, Ecuador, Guatemala, Guyana, Peru, Surinam (Caribbean Area Office) and Venezuela and immunization activities in a number of countries, including Guyana and Peru.

Child Protection

22. In Honduras, UNICEF is developing an integral project: “Development of a Model of Protection for the Children of communities with different Cultural characteristics of Honduras”. The first phase is being developed in two indigenous areas with Pech and Tolupa populations. The aim of the project is to fight against the vulnerability and invisibility of indigenous children in the public policies and the community activities.

⁹ Ibid, para. 124.

¹⁰ Ibid, para. 127.

23. In Peru, UNICEF has organized Children defense Council in several municipalities in the Amazon basin. The Office in Peru is also implementing a HRBA programme on birth registration to guarantee that members of indigenous communities are recognized by the public system as registrars. This guarantees that indigenous names and cultural practices are preserved, while civil and political rights are also respected.

24. This office is also carrying out an ongoing study called “Coping Behaviours on Child Protection of Indigenous Communities” which is expected to be completed early this year. This study hopes to document the local concept of wellbeing of the selected indigenous peoples and determine how the indigenous peoples, particularly the women, children and younger members of the community are coping with the current threats in their realities. The study adopts the stress and coping framework which recognizes the importance of indigenous knowledge systems and practices (IKSPs), customary laws, indigenous education, personality and environment as critical elements and the rights based framework which places IP communities as rights holders.

25. UNICEF Guatemala has helped sensitize key players and public opinion regarding ratification of the Hague Convention and enactment of the Law on Adoptions, which will help guarantee the rights of indigenous children involved in irregular international adoption cases. This office was also involved in giving visibility to indigenous girls in public opinion and public policies after the elaboration of a study on their situation.

26. UNICEF and ILO have agreed to work jointly on Indigenous Child Labour by developing a concept paper focused on notions about childhood, poverty and child labour for indigenous peoples and, the reality of child labour in and outside of the indigenous community environment. Both issues require defining guidelines as well as a strategy for establishing research TORs involving indigenous organisations. Once the research has been completed, a consultation process with indigenous organisations at the national level is foreseen for developing an Action Plan, which can be transferred to National Commissions of Child Labour.

Advocacy for indigenous children

27. Advocacy for child rights is central in UNICEF support to indigenous peoples. In Venezuela, UNICEF supports the annual “Convivencia de Niños and Niñas Indígenas” (Meeting of Indigenous Boys and Girls), which has child rights as a main theme. The visit of then UNICEF Executive Director to Namibia five years ago, which was widely covered by the media, helped give credibility and authority to the Omaheke San Trust, the first indigenous self-help organization of the marginalized San. In Thailand, in 2000, UNICEF supported the production of child rights audio-tapes in the language of highland communities in the north of the country.

28. In other countries of LAC, studies are being supported by a number of Country Offices in order to obtain the information needed to determine the specific situation of indigenous people and their relationship to non-indigenous population. These include a study of Mayan traditions and perceptions about work and education in Guatemala, a community survey of 11 Amazon villages in Guyana. Some Country Offices indicate that indigenous people are mentioned specifically in the Common Country Assessment (CCA) or United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) of several countries, including Bolivia, Brazil, Guatemala, Panama and Peru.

Education

29. Education is an important area of UNICEF's programming for indigenous peoples in many countries in West and Central African. In Cameroon, for example, UNICEF has provided basic education and water and sanitation in schools for school-going Baka Pygmy children. This office has constructed school latrines, renovated classrooms, provided school materials to some 1200 Baka Pygmy children, provided enrollment-support of about 500 girl children in schools in the East, trained teachers working in Baka's communities on the New Pedagogic Approach (NAP), and provided birth certificates to several children.

30. UNICEF also supports education programmes for indigenous populations in Brazil, Colombia, Guyana, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru and Venezuela; the San in Namibia and remote area dwellers (RADs) in Botswana. Bilingual intercultural education programmes in Bolivia, Brazil, Ecuador, Guatemala, Panama, Peru and Venezuela continue to receive UNICEF support. UNICEF supports intercultural bilingual education initiatives, not only for indigenous peoples. All these initiatives have a rights based approach that includes allowing for participation of right holders (preparing materials, being part of the decision making of the school model, etc.) and building the capacity of duty bearers.

31. In Bolivia UNICEF continues supporting indigenous girl education by providing free transportation in remote areas. This project became the reference for the design of national strategies improving access to education for indigenous girls.

32. In Bolivia, in a large number of indigenous communities, empowerment of the indigenous population has been attained through the support to non-formal adult education programs. These programs have been seen to improve access to the exercise of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights. One of the most visible examples of inequality between the indigenous and non-indigenous population, are the illiteracy rates, especially of women. Against this background, the experience of UNICEF demonstrates that the population that benefited from literacy and permanent education processes has made important changes in their access and participation in decision levels, because of an increased empowerment. Also, the education processes substantially contribute to the reduction of the maternal and infant mortality rates. Furthermore, cultural and linguistic recovery strategies contribute positively to the fortification of the cultural identity of indigenous peoples.

33. UNICEF has for the past six years also provided essential basic social services to the indigenous population (the “pygmies”) in Congo Brazzaville, more specifically in the provinces of Likouala and Sangha. UNICEF, for example, has built and restored schools, provided academic material and teacher training, and sent more than a thousand indigenous children to school.

B. Indigenous women

34. UNICEF believes that gender equality benefits women and children, and has a tremendous positive impact on the development of the society as a whole. The particular exclusion of indigenous women and girls is a focus of UNICEF support in several countries, including Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Guatemala, Peru, the Philippines and Sudan. The Office of the Ombudsperson for Indigenous Women in Guatemala, for example, helps respond to the triple discrimination (of gender, ethnicity and social condition) that affects Mayan women. Most of the programmes for indigenous girls and women are focused on access to education.

C. Data collection and disaggregation

35. During the preparation of a Situation Analysis or Common Country Assessment, UNICEF Country Offices and UN Country Teams are requested to review data disaggregated by gender, age, location, or language group, and conduct in-depth assessments and analyses of the situation of highly disadvantaged groups, and among these are often included indigenous peoples (along with minority groups, or populations living in remote areas, squatter areas and/or in extreme poverty). Where necessary, Offices are to assist countries to improve national data collection systems so that disaggregated data are captured and analyzed.

IV. Obstacles to implementation of recommendations of the Permanent Forum, or other policies relevant to indigenous peoples

36. UNICEF welcomes the recommendations issued by the Permanent Forum and is committed to working towards their implementation in line with its Mission statement. Since recommendations are often numerous, it is UNICEF's understanding that they will be realized in a progressive manner.

37. In the context of the UNICEF 2006-2009 Medium Term Strategic Plan, Country offices are requested to encourage indigenous organizations with which they operate to work together through alliances. This allows for a better use of resources in a larger scale of projects that benefit more people than a number of small projects – unless there is a specific reason to act at a small scale level, such as fighting an epidemic threatening a small group or the disappearance of an indigenous language for example.

38. UNICEF's work on indigenous issues still remains a challenge due to ongoing political sensitivities around these issues. For instance, in some countries, the publication of data on the situation of indigenous peoples continues to be highly sensitive. However, UNICEF has taken action to try to overcome these constraints; for example in LAC, UNICEF has undertaken several studies to raise awareness towards culturally appropriate interventions, with the participation of indigenous communities. In Venezuela there has been a study on child-rearing practices in six (6) ethnic groups, on the basis of Free Prior Informed Consent. In Costa Rica, UNICEF has also undertaken surveys on the perceptions that non-indigenous people have of indigenous peoples, and in Chile, a survey on discrimination against indigenous adolescents was carried out.

V. Facilitating factors for the implementation of recommendations of the Permanent Forum

39. At Headquarters level, UNICEF is planning to increase its support to country offices by adopting a comprehensive approach to addressing issues related to excluded and marginalized groups, including indigenous peoples.

40. At the regional level, over the last 3 years, UNICEF TACRO (Regional Office for Latin America and the Caribbean) has also dedicated a team of two professionals that then expanded to four, to assist country offices and intergovernmental bodies in addressing disparities as one of the main threats to MDG achievement in the region, particularly affecting indigenous peoples. More recently, and following the recommendation that the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues made in the context of the Second Decade of the World's Indigenous people, UNICEF has started a dialogue with indigenous leaders from the Caribbean to identify the key challenges on indigenous issues and strategic actions to address these.

VI. Policy or similar tools on indigenous peoples' issues

41. In the context of its Medium Term Strategic Plan (MTSP) for 2006-2009, UNICEF is using the human rights based approach (HRBA) that is based on the adoption of a comprehensive and holistic approach that focuses on tackling the root causes of discrimination and exclusion against indigenous children through public policies. The MTSP document clearly recognizes that: "In some countries, the children of indigenous populations tend to be disproportionately deprived of basic services. UNICEF's cooperation will seek to benefit these children as a matter of priority, where needed".

42. In addition, the UNICEF Global Programme Policy and Procedure Manual emphasizes attention to the human rights and principles of the CRC at all phases of the programme process, as well as a focus on the most vulnerable and poor population group.

VII. Other significant information regarding recent programmes, budgetary allocations or projects/activities regarding indigenous peoples' issues.

General developments

43. UNICEF has further strengthened its Advisory Group of Indigenous Leaders in the Latin American region. In Ecuador and Bolivia UNICEF has supported the constitution and functioning of an Advisory Group of Indigenous Leaders for the UNCT.

44. Following the Second Decade Programme of Action Recommendation UNICEF held the first meeting on the Rights of Indigenous Children on the Caribbean with Indigenous Leaders and focal points of that sub-region. The main recommendations are to strengthen information sharing and networking; empowerment and capacity-building; and intercultural bilingual education.

45. As part of the Durban evaluation process UNICEF TACRO (Regional Office for Latin America and the Caribbean) is planning to convene a joint meeting of the Indigenous and Afro-descendent Advisory Groups to strategize on their role and contribution to this evaluation process.

46. In Cameroon UNICEF was invited by the Ministry of Social Affairs, current March 2007 to join in preparatory activities for the International Forum on Indigenous People in Central Africa. The Forum initiated by the Republic of Congo took place from April 10 – 15 in Impfondo (Congo). UNICEF was represented in 3 working sessions and offered to support financially the participation of one representative of the Pygmy to the Forum, however, this offer was not taken up.

VIII. Areas not covered by recommendations addressed in UNICEF's programmes

Participation

47. In the Philippines, UNICEF completed a participatory community appraisal of eight indigenous “Kabihug” communities in Camarines Norte with extensive participation of indigenous youth as part of the research team (Indigenous Peoples Community Appraisal (Kabihug Study)). The appraisal focused on children, youth and women, and involved the participation of 968 members of the Kabihug community which represents over 36 percent of the entire population of this group in Camarines Norte. Among other findings the study found that Kabihug children are almost completely uneducated, Kabihug births are almost universally unregistered and Kabihug families are routinely forced to abandon their homes and move off of plantations where they work.

Legislative reform

48. UNICEF is providing support to legal and institutional reform in aid of indigenous peoples in several countries, including Ecuador and Peru. In Peru, for example, UNICEF helped review national laws in terms of discrimination against children of indigenous people, providing legal and technical advice to the Senate and the House of Representatives. With respect to legislative reform, UNICEF has been currently asked to support the inclusion of child issues in constitutional processes in Bolivia, Ecuador, and is providing support to Costa Rica on the bill related to the autonomous development of indigenous people.

Health and Nutrition

49. Health and nutrition programmes for indigenous people are supported in Bolivia, Ecuador, Panama, Paraguay, Peru and Venezuela. In Peru, overcoming the cultural and geographic barriers that limit women's access to maternal health care in rural areas is an important step to accelerate progress towards MDG 6 – to improve maternal health. A programme developed by UNICEF-Peru, Cultural Adaptation of Maternity Services, during the last five years shows that taking an intercultural approach to obstetric care increases the coverage of institutional obstetric services, reduces maternal and prenatal mortality and establishes a more gratifying relationship between the service provider and the user.

50. In rural and indigenous communities in Peru, many women cannot exercise their right to a healthy and safe motherhood due to cultural, geographic and economic barriers. According to the Ministry of Health, women in rural areas are twice as likely as women in urban areas to die from pregnancy-related causes. Skilled attendance at delivery – one of the main determinants of maternal morbidity and mortality – reached only 20 per cent of women in rural communities, compared to 69 per cent in urban areas in the 2000 year. Most rural women give birth at home attended only by unskilled traditional midwives or relatives, often due to long-established beliefs and practices. Their babies are also less likely to survive. According to the latest official statistics, infant mortality in rural areas is twice as high as in urban areas. In Cuzco, one of the country's poorest departments, as many as 84 out of every 1,000 infants die before their first birthday, compared to an infant mortality rate of 17 per 1,000 live births in the capital Lima.

51. UNICEF Peru's maternal health project included four strategies: 1) The establishment of maternal waiting houses to resolve the difficulty posed by geographic distance; 2) Family and community support to make maternity and the mother's condition a priority; 3) Comprehensive health insurance to cover the costs; and cultural adaptation of maternity services to eliminate cultural barriers that exist between the staff at health facilities and mothers who have deeply rooted cultural traditions with respect to childbirth, and 4) Health staff trained to provide care while respecting the local culture, combining traditional practices – such as vertical birth – with their work.

52. This experience has transformed everyday health service by promoting cultural changes in the approach to care and in its routine elements. In the regions served by the UNICEF-Peru Programme of Cooperation, three out of every four pregnant women now avail themselves of health care services, particularly for childbirth, while prior to the intervention the ratio was only one in four. The experience has become local and regional policy, and was adopted in 2004 by the Ministry of Health as a national standard to be implemented as public policy throughout the country. In 2005 The Ministry of Health approved national technical guidelines by which the traditional birth was assumed as public policy.

53. Another example of the human rights based approach to development has been the support that UNICEF Peru has provided to the Kandozi people in the Amazon Jungle. This group was about to disappear due to a Hepatitis B infection. In four years the immunization coverage to prevent vertical transmission went from 58 % to 92%.

X. Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

55. UNICEF is committed to reaching the objectives of the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People and welcomes the Permanent Forum's useful guidance on priorities in this regard.

X. Information and suggestions regarding the special theme of the seventh session, "Climate change, bio-cultural diversity and livelihoods: the stewardship role of indigenous peoples and new challenges"

56. UNICEF is increasingly concerned about the vulnerability of children to the impact of climate change, e.g. increased disasters, threat to scarce water resources, food security and increased disease burden. It is vital to address children's and environmental issues, both in terms of the impact of environment on children's survival, growth and development and in terms of the important roles children can play as agents for change.

57. UNICEF Innocenti Research Center (IRC) in cooperation with UNICEF's Programme Division at headquarters level is currently developing a policy paper on Climate Change and Children from a Human Security perspective with the support of the Greek Foreign Ministry as Chair of the Human Security Network (HSN). The policy paper will develop a multi-generational, multidisciplinary vision of climate change and its implications for children, pointing the way to means to address it. Ideas for the exact scope, focus and organization of the paper are currently emerging, and will be further crystallized in the context of an Expert Consultation to be held in Florence, 17-18 January 2008. However, a human security perspective on the issues for children might include the impact on indigenous children and conversely, indigenous ways of knowing as part of the solution.

58. UNICEF Cameroon hopes to grant financial support to ensure the participation of one representative of the Baka Pygmies in the session.

XI. List of conferences and other meetings under UNICEF regarding indigenous issues in 2008-2009

59. UNICEF East Asia and Pacific Regional Office (EAPRO) and UNESCO is co-coordinator and sponsor of the 2nd International Conference on Language Development, Language Revitalization, and Multilingual Education in ethno-linguistic Communities- being held in Bangkok from 1-3 July 2008 jointly with an array of UN, NGO and university partners.

60. Furthermore, UNICEF Thailand is organizing in close coordination with the Language Development Conference an international conference on “National Language Policy: Language Diversity for National Unity,” July 4-5, 2008, in Bangkok, Thailand.

61. In Congo Brazzaville UNICEF is planning a workshop to discuss the implementation of the national action plan on indigenous peoples adopted in 2007, as well as a lender roundtable in order to mobilize the necessary funds needed to achieve the objectives of the action plan.
