

SECOND INTERNATIONAL DECADE

OF THE

WORLD'S INDIGENOUS PEOPLE

SECOND INTERNATIONAL DECADE of the WORLD'S INDIGENOUS PEOPLE

We are now in the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (2005-2015), proclaimed by the United Nations General Assembly in 2004.

The goal of the Second Decade, with the theme "Partnership for action and dignity", is the "further strengthening of international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous peoples in such areas as culture, education, health, human rights, the environment and social and economic development, by means of actionoriented programmes and specific projects, increased technical assistance and relevant standardsetting activities".

Mr. Sha Zukang, who is the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs, serves as the Coordinator for the Second Decade.

The Programme of Action of the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, launched at the fifth session of the United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues in 2006, has five clear objectives.

OBJECTIVES of the SECOND DECADE

Promote non-discrimination and inclusion of indigenous peoples in international, regional and national processes.

Promote full and effective participation of indigenous peoples in decisions affecting them.

Redefine development from a vision of equity and in a culturally appropriate way—development with identity.

Adopt targeted policies, programmes, projects and budgets for indigenous peoples' development.

Develop strong monitoring mechanisms and accountability at the international, regional and national levels in relation to existing legal, policy and operational frameworks protecting indigenous peoples.

PROGRAMME of ACTION

The Programme of Action of the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People invites States, the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations, indigenous peoples' organizations, other non-governmental organizations, the private sector and other parts of civil society to strive for its implementation. Each section of the Programme contains recommendations for action at the international, regional and national levels.

The UN system is also promoting indigenous issues through the framework of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (General Assembly resolution 61/295), through major conferences and summits, including on the implementation of Agenda 21, and within the framework of the Decade of Education for Sustainable Development, the International Decade for Action, "Water for Life" (2005-2015), and the World Programme for Human Rights Education.

The implementation of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) aims to reduce poverty and hunger, and to tackle ill-health, gender inequality, lack of education, lack of access to clean water, and environmental degradation, by 2015. The Programme of Action is an important vehicle for achieving the MDGs from an indigenous perspective.

The Programme of Action is a rich compilation of action-oriented activities addressing the areas of culture, education, health, human rights, the environment, and social and economic development. It also outlines how to promote and monitor its effectiveness.

"Governments; United Nations agencies, funds and programmes; other intergovernmental organizations; indigenous and other nongovernmental organizations; and civil society actors are invited to adopt plans of concrete activities with specific benchmarks to implement the goal, objectives and programme of action of the Second Decade. Gender should be mainstreamed in such activities."

"Let us recall the goal of the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (2005-2015), set by the General Assembly: 'the further strengthening of international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous peoples . . .'. I would like us all to reflect on what an exciting, hopeful time this is in our work with and in the service of indigenous peoples. We have the opportunity now, after so many years of efforts, to promote and transform into reality the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, so that indigenous peoples participate fully and without discrimination in the broader societies in which they live—for the benefit not just of themselves but of humankind as a whole."

Mr. Sha Zukang, Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs, 22 October 2007
