“ There is enough to despair about today in Europe today in terms of discrimination, social exclusion, and violence and hate –crime against Jews, Muslims, Blacks, Migrants, LGBT, Disabled people, and others. There is no hierarchy which makes one more important than the other, but we must deal with the specificities of Anti- Semitism.

Sometimes referred to as the ‘ oldest hatred”, persecution of the Jewish people existed before there was Christianity or Islam, before the Middle East Conflict.

While it may not manifest itself in the same kind of economic discrimination as some other forms of racism in Europe today, it remains still a virulent, insidious cross-cutting and often violent hatred which strikes at the heart of the European Union.”
