Human rights for all in sustainable development:

Is the post-2015 process really delivering?

Side Event hosted by the Post-2015 Human Rights Caucus at the President of the General Assembly's High-level Stocktaking Event on the Post-2015

Development Agenda

13:15 – 14:45, Thursday 11 September 2014

United Nations Headquarters, Room CR-A

Last year, the UN Secretary General—in his report, “A life of dignity for all”—endorsed a sustainable development “vision of the future firmly anchored in human rights,” echoing widespread support from governments, civil society, and the UN Task Team that a holistic human rights framework must lie at the heart of the SDGs themselves, how they are financed, and in their monitoring and accountability infrastructure.

At a liminal point in the debate over what will succeed the Millennium Development Goals, various members of the Post-2015 Human Rights Caucus—a cross-constituency coalition of development, environment, trade union, feminist and human rights organizations worldwide—will come together to evaluate whether the post-2015 process and the new proposal for sustainable development goals deliver on this vision. How do the Sustainable Development Goals and targets proposed by the Open Working Group stand up to the human rights litmus test? How well does the OWG ensure the rights of indigenous peoples and other groups marginalized from economic and social development? How well will the Goals—and the envisioned monitoring and accountability infrastructure—hold public and private actors to account to respect, protect and fulfill the right to development? And how will these Goals be paid for in human rights-sensitive ways? Participants will debate these keystone questions, and in so doing lay out a blueprint for embedding human rights into the core of the post-2015 sustainable development agenda.

Panelists include:

Myrna Cunningham, UN Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (TBC)
Savio Carvalho, Amnesty International
Nerea Craviotto, AWID
Paul Quintos, IBON International (TBC)
Lilian Sepulveda, Center for Reproductive Rights

[Response: Mac Darrow, OHCHR (TBC)]

Moderated by Niko Lusiani, CESR and co-convener of the Post-2015 Human Rights Caucus
