Conflict, Multilateralism & UN SDGs: Three Tentative Scenarios

(1) Reinvigorated Liberal Multilateralism
(2) Muddling Through
(3) A new Illiberal International
Reinvigorated liberal multilateralism

- Domestic politics and institutions
  - Democracy, rule of law, civil rights & liberties
  - Inclusive political identities, “civic nationalism”
  - Progressive role models and diffusion of liberalism

- International order
  - Strengthening of multilateral institutions & policies
  - Cooperative rather than conflictual interactions

- Implications for political violence
  - Less discrimination, political exclusion and repression
  - Non-violent avenues for political participation & change
  - Less violence throughout

- Implications for sustainable development
  - Coordinated action to address challenges (e.g. climate, conflict, migration)
  - Sustainable development as top priority in domestic and international politics

- Positive feedback loops
Muddling through

- Domestic politics and institutions
  - Liberal reforms in some countries, backsliding in others
  - Competition between nativist and internationalist movements & ideologies
- International order
  - Multilateral institutions remain important but increasingly contested
  - Competition between regional and ideological camps
- Implications for political violence
  - Intrastate conflict persists
  - New onsets as well as successful endings
- Implications for sustainable development
  - Incremental progress but important misses
  - Coalitions of the willing
- Probably not enough
A new illiberal International

- Domestic politics and institutions
  - Populist victories & democratic backsliding
  - Nativism & extreme nationalism
  - Authoritarian role models and diffusion of illiberalism

- International order
  - Weakening of multilateral institutions (UN, NATO, EU…)
  - Zero-sum rather than mutual gains-based interactions

- Implications for political violence
  - More discrimination, political exclusion and repression
  - More violent opposition
  - Potential resurgence of interstate war (e.g. irredentist campaigns)

- Implications for sustainable development
  - No coordinated action to address challenges (e.g. climate, conflict, migration)
  - Governments pursue other (spending) priorities

- Negative feedback loops
