KEY IDEAS

- Family can become the key connector for the implementation of different sort of policies in the states of the world.
- The major changes that we face as a society, in this XXI century, necessarily entails to a new and more holistic vision of the legislative and good governance processes of this century.
- The needs of policies, of lawmaking processes and government decisions must be more transversal and offer a 360° circular vision in order to give a real response to the new challenges that we face as a world.
- There is a need for lawmakers, policymakers, decision makers and active civil society, to make this change of paradigm in the construction and implementation of policies.
- The family appears as a transversal connector of the different policies and through it many of the objectives established by United Nations can be implemented, as it is demonstrated in the SDGs & Families Global Research Project.
