Indicators on the human rights of migrants

- Growing demand for indicators for use in human rights assessments and in furthering national implementation of human rights obligations.
- Knowledge-gap on the human rights situation of migrants, particularly of migrants in an irregular situation.
- Where data is available, it can be incomplete.
 - Data on stock and flows: lack of detail on the circumstances of migrants.
 - Population censuses: limited value in tracking irregular and marginalized migrant populations.

OHCHR, Human Rights Indicators: A Guide to Measurement and Implementation

- OHCHR's methodology on human rights indicators.
- Recommends the development of:
 - structural indicators: commitments and acceptance of international human rights standards .
 - process indicators : efforts being made to meet the obligations that flow from the standards.
 - outcome indicators : the results of those efforts.

Indicators on the human rights of migrants; a KNOMAD initiative, in collaboration with the GMG Working Group on Migration, Human Rights and Gender

- Draft indicators on the rights to health, education and decent work.
- Up to three national consultations to contextualise and validate the indicators, and elicit a policy dialogue with all national stakeholders.
- Available to the GFMD May summit, and to the post-2015 UN development agenda.

“In 2000, the process for selecting the MDGs was opaque and, if I may say so, technocratic. Proposals that lacked quantifiable measures and cross-national data-sets were rejected. Civil and political rights were often excluded. We treasured what we measured — and perhaps that was the wrong way round. It seems to me we should measure what we treasure.”

Navi Pillay, High Commissioner for Human Rights

Expert meeting on indicators on the human rights of migrants, March 2014

- OHCHR, in collaboration with KNOMAD and in partnership with ILO, is organising an expert meeting to develop a set of human rights indicators relevant to migrants, focusing specifically on:
 - the right to health
 - the right to education
 - the right to decent work
- Aim: to spell out the essential attributes of the rights enshrined in international instruments and translate these rights into contextually relevant indicators and benchmarks for implementing and measuring the human rights of migrants, particularly at country level
