President of the Council, transmitting the report of the Panel of Experts.\textsuperscript{393}

In the report, the Panel of Experts noted that in the absence of a strong, central and democratically elected Government in control of its territory, the illegal exploitation of natural resources would continue and serve as motivation and fuel for continued conflict in the region. While the establishment of the Transitional Government was a significant step in the right direction, the Panel believed that the peace process was not yet irreversible. One of the most significant challenges was enabling the timely extension of the transitional authority throughout the national territory, in particular in such problematic areas as Ituri and the Kivus. Parallel to the extension of government authority, the Panel recommended that a number of institutional reforms be initiated to allow the democratically elected central Government, once in place, to ensure the legal exploitation of natural resources. Such institutional changes included the effective control of national borders, strengthening the accounting and auditing system, and breaking up the large State-owned resources enterprises. The Panel also believed that the most helpful factor in ensuring the reunification of the national territory would be the effective integration of the new armed forces. The Panel recommended the consideration of immediate interim measures to end the illegal exploitation of natural resources, including stopping the flow of illegal arms to the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Stressing that the people of the Democratic Republic of the Congo needed to be quickly convinced that peace was better than conflict, the Panel recommended that specific quick-impact projects re-establishing social and economic infrastructure be undertaken to convince people of the advantages of peace. Lastly, the Panel believed that none of its recommendations could be sustained in the long term unless a regional solution was found.

At the meeting, in which to the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Angola) made a statement on behalf of the Council,\textsuperscript{394} by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned the continuing illegal exploitation of natural resources in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Reaffirmed the importance of stopping them by exerting, if need be, the necessary pressure on the armed groups, traffickers and all other actors involved;

Urged all States concerned, especially those in the region, to take the appropriate steps to end those illegal activities, by proceeding with their own investigations, on the basis, in particular, of information and documentation accumulated by the Panel during its work and forwarded to Governments, including through judicial means where possible, and, if necessary, to report to the Council.

\section*{11. The situation in the Central African Republic}

\textbf{Decision of 10 February 2000 (4101st meeting): statement by the President}

At its 4101st meeting, on 10 February 2000, the Security Council included in its agenda the ninth report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA).\textsuperscript{1} In his report, the Secretary-General observed that it appeared that the authorities of the Central African Republic had accepted the prospects of the withdrawal of MINURCA on 15 February 2000, despite their preference to have the drawdown delayed until December 2000. Noting that he had received a letter from the President of Algeria and the Chairman of the Organization of African Unity\textsuperscript{2} urging that more time be given to allow the new Government to consolidate peace, the Secretary-General noted that he had responded by stressing the importance of the determination of the parties to consolidate the progress made. The Secretary-General held that the people and Government of the Central African Republic had already demonstrated their strong commitment to democracy and peaceful development, but cautioned that the country remained vulnerable to the volatile situation in the subregion and that challenges remained, particularly with regard to the restructuring of the security and armed forces. The Secretary-General pointed out that as from 15 February 2000, the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA) would take over from MINURCA. BONUCA would support the efforts of the Government to consolidate peace and democracy in the Central African Republic and added that preparations had begun on the restructuring and demobilisation programmes.

At the meeting, the President (Argentina) made a statement on behalf of the Council, by which the Council, inter alia:

Commended MINURCA and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the contribution they had made to the restoration of peace and security in the Central African Republic;

Recognized the significant progress made by the Government of the Central African Republic in implementing the Bangui Agreements;

Urged the Government of the Central African republic to continue to conform to the requirements of the economic reform and financial consolidation programmes agreed with the international financial institutions;

Welcomed the promulgation by the Central African authorities of three laws on the restructuring of the armed forces;

Welcomed in particular the decision by the Government of the Central African Republic to disband the Special Force for the Defence of the Republican Institutions;

Welcomed the decision by the Secretary-General, which had been accepted by the Government of the Central African Republic, to establish, for an initial period of one year that began on 15 February 2000, the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic, headed by a representative of the Secretary-General.

Decision of 23 January 2001 (4262nd meeting): statement by the President

At its 4261st meeting, on 23 January 2001, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in the Central African Republic and on the activities of BONUCA.

In his report, the second on the subject, the Secretary-General observed that the situation in the Central African Republic was a source of great concern. He warned that the lack of any political dialogue between the Government and the opposition did not contribute to the consolidation of the country’s young democratic institutions. At the same time, the Secretary-General welcomed the fact that the Bretton Woods institutions had started providing assistance to the Government of the Central African Republic as the socio-economic situation in the country was extremely volatile and continued to cause social upheaval and strikes. Reporting that on 19 December 2000 an opposition rally, taking place in defiance of a Government ban, had been dispersed by security forces, and 73 people, including four parliamentarians who had been arrested, he characterized the social situation in the country as “explosive”. Moreover, the Secretary-General cautioned that the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo had a negative impact on the Central African Republic through increased refugee flows, and reported that he had sent a Special Envoy to assess the impact of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo on the Central African Republic and the Republic of the Congo.

At the meeting, the Council heard briefings by the Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of BONUCA, the Acting Deputy Director of the Regional Bureau for Africa of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), and the Vice-President for External Affairs and United Nations Affairs of the World Bank. During the meeting, statements were made by all members of the Council, as well as by the representative of the Central African Republic and the Permanent Observer for the International Organization of la Francophonie.

Introducing the Secretary-General’s report, the Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of BONUCA stressed the increase in tensions between the Government and the opposition, with the former delaying dialogue and the latter seemingly favouring confrontation and calling for the President’s resignation. He cautioned that the socio-economic situation remained precarious, as did the human rights situation particularly with regard to “neighbourhood justice” and the situation for detainees. Noting that the security situation remained calm and that progress was being made in disarmament and restructuring of the security and defence forces, he pointed out that there had been no tangible progress on the demobilization and reintegration programme.\(^6\)

The Acting Deputy Director of the Regional Bureau for Africa of UNDP reported that the National Programme for Demobilization and Reintegration, with support from UNDP, had established the technical conditions for implementation and was moving into its initial phase.\(^7\)

The Vice-President for External Affairs and United Nations Affairs of the World Bank held that international institutions could provide some temporary relief for pressing problems like civil service salary arrears, but only determined efforts by the Government could address the root causes of the crisis — especially weak governance — and provide a lasting solution.\(^8\)

During the debate, most speakers expressed serious concern about the political tensions and lack of dialogue in the Central African Republic, which, many members said, posed an obstacle to consolidation of the new democratic institutions in the country, and threatened to unravel the progress made over the past four to five years. While welcoming the progress made by BONUCA with regard to disarmament and restructuring of the security and defence forces, they deplored the slow pace of the demobilization and reintegration programme. Most speakers underlined the importance of international involvement in the Central African Republic, while emphasizing that the political will of the people of that country was imperative in order to move towards dialogue and national reconciliation. A number of speakers urged the Government of the Central African Republic to initiate dialogue, and called on the opposition to respond favourably to such an initiative.

Most members of the Council were concerned with the inadequate financial resources to deal with the problems facing the Central African Republic, and commended the assistance provided by the Bretton Woods institutions. Some Council members welcomed the approval by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) of debt relief for the country.\(^9\) Several speakers expressed concern with the arrears in the payment of civil servants, which contributed to the political and social tensions, and prevented the proper functioning of the country’s public institutions.

A number of Council members expressed concern for the repercussions of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, particularly the impact of a new flow of refugees and of an increased circulation and trafficking in small arms. Many members looked forward to receiving recommendations from the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General on this issue.

The representative of the Central African Republic reaffirmed the interest of his Government in consolidating the country’s democratic institutions, despite the logic of confrontation pursued by “some extremist political leaders”. Moreover, he emphasized that the Central African Republic did not have a political crisis, as 95 percent of the institutions provided for in the Constitution were functioning well; but a social crisis, rooted in the events of the 1990s, which had created a backlog in payment to civil servants. He added that this economic backlog had only been worsened by the fuel crisis and the impact of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. At the same time, the representative pointed to improvements in the human rights situation in his country. While noting that some “corrupt politicians” continued their disruptive and irresponsible activities, he indicated that the governing party did not have a militia. He pointed out that his Government continued to reiterate its openness to dialogue, and added that the opposition leaders did “sometimes visit” on non-political occasions.\(^10\)

The representative of the International Organization of la Francophonie warned that the social crisis and lack of political dialogue in the Central African Republic could endanger reconciliation efforts. Recalling the efforts by that organization and its members in the Central African Republic, he reported that a recent mission, initiated by its Secretary-General, had recommended a comprehensive assessment of the implementation of the Bangui Agreements and of the National Reconciliation Plan as a way to renew dialogue among all actors in the country.\(^11\)

At its 4262nd meeting, on 23 January 2001, the Council again included the report of the Secretary-found in the residence of former President Kollingba. The Secretary-General pointed out that the attempted coup d’état had further complicated the already tense social and economic situation, and had led to increased violations of human rights. Noting that the Front de Libération du Congo, led by Jean-Pierre Bemba, had provided support to President Patassé during the attempted coup d’état, the Secretary-General voiced concern that the impact of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo on the Central African Republic risked getting a political dimension, in addition to the economic, humanitarian and security dimensions already at play. However, a recent visit by a Congolese delegation to Bangui seemed to have cleared up the misunderstandings between the two Governments.

At the meeting, the President (China) made a statement on behalf of the Council, by which the Council, inter alia:

- Reiterated its condemnation of the recent attempted coup in the Central African Republic;
- Expresed deep concern at the precarious situation in the country and the persisting acts of violence;
- Strongly condemned the killing of the security coordinator for the United Nations system in the Central African Republic and urged to bring those responsible to justice;
- Requested the Secretary-General to submit to it by 30 September 2001 recommendations on how the United Nations might further contribute to the recovery of the country;
- Urged all States that made pledges at the special donor meeting to fulfil them; and called on the Bretton Woods institutions to conclude programmes with the country;
- Stressed the crucial importance of poverty eradication, debt payment and public administration.

Decision of 26 September 2001 (4382nd meeting): statement by the President

At its 4380th meeting, on 21 September 2001, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in the Central African Republic. In his report, the Secretary-General characterized the situation in the Central African Republic following the coup attempt as seriously destabilized and requiring immediate and increased levels of external assistance. He observed that the period since the failed coup attempt had been marked by sharp political tensions with political dialogue no longer being on the agenda; further economic decline with the State being unable to pay salaries to public servants on a regular basis; simmering social tensions; and a lack of security as the crisis in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continued to spill over into the Central African Republic with increased proliferation of weapons and refugee flows. The Secretary-General added that more than 20,000 people had fled the Central African Republic during the violence surrounding the coup attempt, most of whom had crossed the border into the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He noted that the presence of a number of presumed putschists among those refugees constituted a security concern for the Central African authorities, who had since closed the border between the two States. The Secretary-General recommended a strengthening of the mandate of BONUCA with a special focus on promoting political dialogue and national reconciliation; monitoring the security situation and establishing an early warning mechanism; promoting respect for human rights; and providing political support for the mobilization of resources with a view to economic reconstruction of the country. The Secretary-General stressed that the proposed revision of the mandate of BONUCA would require a significant increase in the Mission’s human, financial and material resources, and suggested that the mandate of a revamped BONUCA be extended for an additional year beyond 31 December 2001.

At the meeting, the Council received briefings by the Representative of the Secretary-General and by the Country Director of the World Bank. During the meeting, statements were made by all Council members, as well as by the representatives of Belgium (on behalf of the European Union17) and Egypt.18

In addition to introducing the report of the Secretary-General, the Representative of the Secretary-General reported on the efforts of BONUCA in helping the Government of the Central African Republic ease political and social tensions. He noted that, while efforts were also under way in the economic and security realms, the attempted coup d’état had exacerbated the situation to such an extent that the country was “almost completely devastated” and called on the country’s partners to provide emergency assistance commensurate with the situation.19

The Country Director at the World Bank reported on the efforts by the World Bank and IMF to assist the Government of the Central African Republic in improving its economic management. He hoped that, in the coming months, the World Bank would be able to contribute to solving the economic management problems in the country.20

All speakers expressed concern about the political, social, economic, human rights and security situation in the Central African Republic, and underlined the need for a coherent programme to address the numerous challenges related to peacebuilding in that country. In that connection, it was repeatedly stressed that while the primary responsibility for achieving progress rested with the Central Africans themselves, international assistance remained crucial. Some delegations pointed out that peacebuilding efforts were not just a matter for the Security Council, but should include a variety of international partners, and would require greater coordination between the Council and other United Nations organs.21

On the socio-economic challenges facing the Central African Republic, most speakers expressed particular concern with the arrears in payment of salaries to public employees and by the decision of the World Bank to suspend its disbursements to the country in the wake of the inability of the authorities to pay their external debt. Several speakers expressed the hope that the World Bank would soon resume its disbursements to the Central African Republic.22 In that context, the representative of Jamaica reiterated his view that structural adjustment programmes often did not take into account the special conditions in post-conflict societies.23

17 Bulgaria, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Malta, Poland, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia and Turkey aligned themselves with the statement.
18 The representative of the Central African Republic was invited to participate but did not make a statement.

Most speakers stressed the importance of restructuring the armed forces of the Central African Republic and of improving efforts to collect weapons throughout the country. Noting the destabilizing impact of the crisis in the Democratic Republic of the Congo on the already fragile situation in the Central African Republic, a number of delegations welcomed the close cooperation between the Representatives of the Secretary-General in the two countries and emphasized the importance of dialogue between all the countries in the region. In that context, several speakers were concerned by the refugee flows, and the thousands of refugees who had fled to the Democratic Republic of the Congo following the attempted coup d’état, and particularly with the alleged presence among them of a number of putchists. The representative of the United States observed that for these refugees to be able to return home, the border between the two countries needed to be reopened and the Government of the Central African Republic needed to guarantee that they would not be harmed upon return. The representative of the Russian Federation agreed that refugees who had left the country out of fear of ethnic persecution needed to be enabled to return home safely. The representative of the United Kingdom advocated that those forces that had fled following the coup be reintegrated into the armed forces instead of seeking to expand new recruitments.

Many speakers expressed concern about the general deterioration of the human rights situation in the Central African Republic, condemning human rights abuses, including extrajudicial violence on the part of the Government. Some delegations called on the Central African authorities to honour their commitment to ensure a fair and transparent trial for those responsible for instigating violence in connection with the attempted coup.

With regard to the recommendations of the Secretary-General to strengthen the mandate of BONUCA, most speakers expressed support for the proposals, but a number of delegations held that there was a need for the Council to receive further clarification of the budgetary implications. At the same time, the representative of Singapore cautioned against approving the new tasks for BONUCA without ensuring commensurate resources to the mission, as that would harm its credibility on the ground. The representative of the United States indicated that any increase in the resources for BONUCA would depend on the efforts of the Government in working with BONUCA and in improving the domestic political dialogue. The representative of France stated that the Council might have reduced the international presence “excessively” after the withdrawal of MINURCA, and expressed support for strengthening BONUCA. As a symbolic gesture, he also suggested that the Representative of the Secretary-General be promoted to Special Representative.

At its 4382nd meeting, on 26 September 2001, the Council invited the representative of the Central African Republic to participate and again included the report of the Secretary-General on the Central African Republic in its agenda. The President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council, by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its continued deep concern at the precarious situation in the Central African Republic;

Reiterated its call on all parties for political dialogue, national reconciliation and respect for human rights in the spirit of the 1998 National Reconciliation Pact; and called on the Central African authorities to follow the internationally accepted standards for due process in the course of investigations and court trials of individuals involved in the coup attempt in May 2001;

Encouraged UNDP and the international financial institutions to consider, in consultation with the Government of the Central African Republic and the Secretary-General’s Representative, ways of strengthening the capacities of the Government of the Central African Republic in the management of its economic and financial affairs, including through secondment of high-level experts;

 Took note with interest of the intention of the Secretary-General, in coordination with the Government of the Central African Republic, to extend the mandate of BONUCA and to strengthen it in accordance with paragraph 29 of his report of 19 September 2001;

Underlined the need to continue the restructuring of the Central African armed forces to enable them to fulfil their role
