

Dr Elisabeth Porter is INCORE Research Director. INCORE is a joint project of the University of Ulster and the United Nations University. It is a Centre for international peace and conflict research, training, policy and practical work (www.incore.ulster.ac.uk). Lis has taught Politics, International Relations and Sociology at: the University of Ulster, Northern Ireland; Flinders University of South Australia; the University of South Australia; and Southern Cross University, Australia where she taught, 'Peace, War and International Politics' and retains links as Associate Professor. She has published on: women, political decision-making and peace-building; security and inclusiveness; citizenship, pluralism, diversity and democratic dialogue; and the political representation of women in Northern Ireland. She is the author of 3 books (Feminist Perspectives on Ethics, Building Good Families, Women and Moral Identity), is co-editor of 2 books (Activating Human Rights, Researching Conflict in Africa: Insights and Experiences). She is writing a 4th book on Peace-building: Women in International Perspectives (Routledge, 2006). She is happily married and has 3 adult children and a beautiful granddaughter.