Promoting Human Security through Sustainable Resettlement in Zambia

Background information

Situated at the heart of central southern Africa, Zambia shares borders with eight countries resulting in significant movements of people including refugees and asylum seekers into its borders. After decades of displacement, in 2014, the Government of Zambia (GoZ) pledged to integrate more than 23,000 refugees from Angola and Rwanda through a Local Integration Programme (LIP) supported by UNHCR. In 2017, UNDP joined the initiative by focusing on the socioeconomic components of the programme.

To ensure that communities living in the resettlement sites of Meheba and Mayukwayukwa are fully integrated into national planning processes at all levels, the programme implements the human security approach and takes into consideration the localized and priority needs of the participating communities. Specifically, social exclusion, discrimination and violence, including child labor, sexual and gender-based violence, coupled with sporadic drought and floods due to climate change and water pollution from neighboring mines have degraded food, health, economic and environmental securities of communities in an around the resettlement sites.

Together the programme assists in realizing the GoZ's resettlement plan from the short- to long-term by leveraging pooled resources from the UNTFHS, DFID, USAID, Japan, Sweden, and the Global Compact Fund, and by bringing together the expertise of additional UN agencies (UN Habitat, FAO, WFP, ILO, UNICEF, IOM and WHO) as well as other stakeholders.

Goals and objectives

The overall goal of the programme is for communities living in the resettlement sites to be productive and fully integrated into Zambian society. Specifically, the programme aims to ensure that (i) the Government at national and sub-national levels undertake inclusive and participatory planning and governance processes that incorporate the resettlement sites; (ii) communities in and around the resettlement sites have access to social services and sustainable economic opportunities; and (iii) resettlement and surrounding communities are tolerant, inclusive and integrated through community dialogue and outreach that enable all residents to live in freedom and dignity and to realize their full potential.

Applying the Human Security approach

Aiming to ensure peaceful and inclusive communities, the programme applies the principles of human security to strengthen social harmony, prosperity and resilience. UNDP and UNHCR, along with other partners, jointly address the underlying causes of poverty and bolster the transition from humanitarian support to longer term sustainable development at all levels.

Towards sustaining peace and development, the programme by being people-centred and context-specific is mindful of the localized and specific needs of the participating communities. Following a top-down and bottom-up approach, the programme ensures that the needs of the target beneficiaries are taken into consideration in national, provincial and local planning processes, social protection mechanisms, and in the provision of other protections such as those provided as a result of good governance and the rule of law. In addition, the programme empowers the participating communities to define their own priorities and play an integral role in finding and implementing solutions, therefore becoming self-reliant and more resilient to current and emerging challenges they face.

The programme is also comprehensive and prevention oriented in that it responds to a wide range of interrelated insecurities and addresses their root causes. Bringing together the knowledge and expertise of various UN agencies in Zambia including UNDP, UNHCR, UN Habitat, FAO, WFP, ILO, UNICEF, UNFPA, IOM and WHO to strengthen synergies by reinforcing and complementing each other's work, the programme provides concrete lessons on the value of the human security approach for the implementation of the Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration and the New Way of Working. Aside from joint UN partnerships, the programme also supports local level government and civil society partnerships and works closely with local leaders and community structures.
