

Community Economic And Environmental Rights Initiative (CEERI)

Member States can begin to find common cause on several elements of the United Nations Secretary-General's New Agenda for Peace, including:

1. Conflict prevention: Member States can agree on the importance of investing in conflict prevention efforts, such as early warning systems, mediation, and diplomacy. They can work together to identify and address the root causes of conflicts before they escalate.
2. Inclusive and participatory peacebuilding: Member States can recognize the need for inclusive and participatory approaches to peacebuilding, ensuring the meaningful participation of all stakeholders, including women, youth, and marginalized groups. They can support initiatives that promote the inclusion of diverse voices in decision-making processes.
3. Strengthening the United Nations peacebuilding architecture: Member States can agree on the need to strengthen the United Nations peacebuilding architecture, including the Peacebuilding Commission and the Peacebuilding Fund. They can work together to provide adequate resources and support to these mechanisms to enhance their effectiveness.
4. Sustainable development and peace: Member States can acknowledge the interlinkages between sustainable development and peace, recognizing that addressing socio-economic inequalities and promoting inclusive growth are essential for building and sustaining peace. They can collaborate on integrating peacebuilding and development efforts to achieve long-term stability.
5. Strengthening partnerships: Member States can agree on the importance of strengthening partnerships between the United Nations, regional organizations, and other relevant stakeholders. They can work together to enhance coordination, collaboration, and information-sharing to maximize the impact of peacebuilding efforts.
