10:05-10:37	SETTING THE STAGE Multilateralism and the future we want. Moderated conversation between the UN Secretary General, the President of the General Assembly, the UN Secretary-General’s Envoy on Youth and two young people. The COVID-19 pandemic has upended our world and called into question the ability of existing institutions of multilateralism to confront such crises. Policy makers around the globe are faced with the double challenge of addressing the pandemic, while tackling the pre-existing threats of the climate crisis, inequality, new patterns of violence and the major changes we are seeing in the population dynamics and technology. This will require bold solutions, harnessing know-how from across borders, sectors and generations, and employing all available resources. With multilateralism at a crossroads, extreme nationalism and unilateralism on the rise, and the world becoming increasingly polarized, there is an urgent need to find an answer to the question: what is the best way forward to tackle the pandemic, while addressing the emerging issues and trends threatening the people, the planet and our common future? How has COVID-19 impacted young people’s view of multilateralism and its future? Can the trust of people in its institutions, and in the UN in particular, be strengthened – if so, what will it take?

How has the crisis impacted their activism? Has the support they need from their leaders been forthcoming? The show will conclude with our panels' thoughts about the future: What needs to change in their country and community as a result of the pandemic? What practical things can people do to help steer our societies in a better direction, so we are better able to cope with the next crisis.
