Part I. Consideration of questions under the responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security

Maintenance of international peace and security: the interdependence between security and development

S/PRST/2011/4
11 February 2011

The Council underlines that integrated action on the ground by security and development actors needs to be coordinated with the national authorities and can significantly contribute to stabilizing and improving the security situation and ensuring the protection of civilians. The Council also notes the importance of cooperation with civil society in this context. The Council affirms that sustainable peace and development cannot be achieved without the inclusion of all relevant stakeholders and underlines that women must be included as active participants in all stages of peacebuilding, peace agreements and development programmes. The Council expresses its willingness to engage in dialogue, where necessary, on specific situations on its agenda with other actors, including United Nations agencies, funds and programmes and international financial institutions (twelfth paragraph).

a Pursuant to a note by the President of the Security Council dated 16 March 2011 (S/2011/141), as from that date the earlier consideration by the Council of issues pertaining to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya under the item entitled “Peace and security in Africa” was subsumed under the item entitled “The situation in Libya”.

33. Women and peace and security

Overview

During the period under review, the Security Council held five meetings, including one high-level meeting, and adopted one resolution and three presidential statements in connection with women and peace and security. In its deliberations, the Council focused on the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000), the issue of conflict-related sexual violence and the participation of women in conflict prevention, resolution and peacebuilding. In addition, the Council included provisions related to women and peace and security in a number of its decisions relating to country-specific and thematic items, reflecting a trend of increased mainstreaming of cross-cutting issues into its work.769

27 April 2010 to 28 October 2011: implementation of resolution 1325 (2000)

On 27 April 2010, the Security Council considered a set of 26 indicators in connection with women and peace and security, developed by the Secretary-General770 to track the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) in the four main areas of prevention, participation, protection, and relief and recovery.771

During the debate, Member States unanimously acknowledged the necessity to measure the progress made since the adoption of resolution 1325 (2000) in order to better identify obstacles to its effective implementation. However, speakers shared a common view that the proposed indicators required further conceptual and technical development before they could be implemented. Some representatives pointed to the need to balance quantitative and qualitative indicators772 and improve their adaptability to country-specific situations.773 Mindful that data collection could prove challenging for some States, particularly those in the midst of or emerging from conflict, some 771 In 2009, the Council adopted resolution 1889 (2009), in which it called for the development of indicators which could serve as a common basis for reporting by relevant United Nations entities, other international and regional organizations and Member States on the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) in 2010 and beyond.

speakers stressed that those States should not be burdened with additional reporting responsibilities and that particular support should be provided to them. Other speakers expressed their wish for a clear delineation of roles and responsibilities among Member States and the United Nations and within the United Nations system. At the end of the meeting, the Council issued a presidential statement in which it requested the Secretary-General to continue to consult with the Council, taking into account views expressed by other relevant stakeholders, including the broader United Nations membership, taking into account the need to further develop the indicators contained in his report, and expressed its intention to take action on a comprehensive set of indicators on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of resolution 1325 (2000) in October 2010.777

On 26 October 2010, at the meeting marking the tenth anniversary of the adoption of resolution 1325 (2000), the Council adopted a presidential statement in which it supported taking forward the set of indicators contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General on women and peace and security for use as an initial framework to track the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000). The Council requested the Secretary-General to propose in his next annual report a strategic framework to guide United Nations implementation of the resolution and expressed its intention to convene a high-level review in 2015.779 In his statement to the Council, the Secretary-General noted that despite the wide array of activities initiated by Member States and the United Nations since the adoption of resolution 1325 (2000), much remained to be done to increase the participation of women at all stages of conflict management and to prevent and prosecute conflict-related gender-based violence, in particular sexual violence. He emphasized the general lack of adequate methods for monitoring progress, a gap which his comprehensive set of indicators sought to bridge.780 In her briefing, the Director of the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) said that the set of indicators submitted in the report represented a highly practical new tool to support the accelerated implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) and strongly urged the Council to begin to use them as a basis for the Council’s review, analysis and intervention on issues related to women and peace and security at both the global and country levels. She added that the operationalization of the indicators would mean a shift in the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) from “just a focus on activities to an output- and results-driven endeavour”.781

A large number of speakers highlighted that the mass rapes perpetrated in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in July 2010 had demonstrated the need to urgently and effectively implement resolution 1325 (2000).782 With regard to the set of indicators developed by the Secretary-General, several speakers encouraged its prompt implementation,783 while others argued that the use of such indicators should be opted on a voluntary basis and applied to conflict-related situations only.785

On 28 October 2011, at its 6642th meeting, the Council considered the comprehensive strategic framework outlined in the annual report of the Secretary-General on women and peace and security, which contained a set of objectives, goals and indicators to guide United Nations implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) until 2020 and to strengthen the accountability of the United Nations system. In his statement to the Council, the Secretary-General called upon Member States to do more, including through additional funding, to implement the priorities of his strategic framework. Most of the speakers welcomed and supported the strategic framework as a positive step forward in the effective implementation of the resolution. The representative of the United Kingdom, however, regretted that such support would not be reflected in the presidential statement to be issued at the end of the meeting. The representative of the Russian Federation stressed that there were pending questions on the suitability, relevance and scope of individual indicators and that a more transparent consultative process should be guaranteed in the discussions on the indicators and the strategic framework.

27 April to 17 December 2010: sexual violence in armed conflict

On 27 April 2010, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Sexual Violence in Conflict. The Special Representative shared her assessment of a number of critical gaps in the response to the widespread and systematic use of sexual violence, particularly rape, as a tactic of war and recommended a five-point priority agenda to strengthen United Nations action, consisting of ending impunity, empowering women to become agents of change, mobilizing political leadership, increasing the recognition of rape as a tactic and consequence of conflict, and ensuring a coordinated response from the United Nations system.

On 16 December 2010, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1960 (2010), in which it expressed its readiness to take appropriate steps to address widespread or systematic sexual violence in situations of armed conflict when considering situations on its agenda. In the resolution, the Council requested the Secretary-General to establish monitoring, analysis and reporting arrangements on conflict-related sexual violence. It encouraged him to include in his reports on the implementation of resolutions 1820 (2008) and 1888 (2009) detailed information on parties to armed conflict that were credibly suspected of committing or being responsible for acts of rape or other forms of sexual violence and to list those in an annex to the reports and expressed its intention to use the list as a basis for more focused engagement with those parties, including measures in accordance with the procedures of relevant sanctions committees. The Council called upon parties to armed conflict to implement specific and time-bound commitments to combat sexual violence and requested the Secretary-General to track and monitor implementation of those commitments and to regularly update the Council in reports and briefings.

During the debate held on 16 and 17 December 2010 there was a large consensus among States that the alarming prevalence of conflict-related sexual violence called for a consistent, coordinated approach and that urgent action was needed to reinforce accountability and end impunity for perpetrators of sexual violence, including through sanctions and referrals to the International Criminal Court. Many expressed hope that the proposed monitoring and reporting mechanisms would be established, adding that reliable data collection and analysis would require increased coordination and collaboration between the various bodies and organs of the United Nations, both at headquarters and in the field. Several speakers noted the importance of building on the experience and practice of the mechanism established under resolutions 1612 (2005) and 1882 (2009) on children and armed conflict, welcoming greater cooperation and information-sharing between the Special Representative on Sexual Violence in Conflict and the Special Representative for Children in Armed Conflict.

Some speakers recommended that the Council establish a working group on women and peace and security, as well as a listing and delisting mechanism, both already in place under the children and armed conflict agenda. Other speakers, while supportive of concrete measures to help to prevent and prosecute crimes of sexual violence, insisted that the tools adopted under resolution 1960 (2010) should be applied to conflicts which were a threat to peace and security.

security only and that the Special Representative on Sexual Violence should perform her responsibilities strictly in line with the mandate formulated by the Council.796

28 October 2011: participation of women in decision-making processes

On 28 October 2011, at its 6642nd meeting, the Council considered the annual report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000)797 and a concept paper prepared by the presidency (Nigeria),798 which emphasized that, despite their essential role in building peace and reinforcing the foundation of democracy, women remained insufficiently involved in all conflict prevention and resolution processes. At that meeting, the Council adopted a presidential statement in which it welcomed the efforts and commitments to implement resolution 1325 (2000) while remaining concerned at the continued low numbers of women in formal institutions of conflict prevention and resolution, particularly in preventive diplomacy and mediation efforts. The Council requested the Secretary-General to assist in enabling regular consultations between women’s groups and relevant participants in conflict mediation and peacebuilding processes and to ensure that regular briefings were provided to his mediators and their teams on gender issues relevant to peace agreement provisions and specific obstacles to full and equal political participation of women. It recognized the need for more systematic attention to and implementation of women and peace and security commitments in its own work and expressed its willingness to ensure that measures to enhance women’s engagement in conflict prevention and resolution and peacebuilding were advanced in its work. The Council also noted with satisfaction the increased coordination and coherence in policy and programming for women and girls within the United Nations system since the creation of UN-Women.799

Mainstreaming of issues relating to women and peace and security in the decisions of the Security Council

During the period under review, the Council continued to include provisions on women and peace and security in country- and region-specific resolutions and presidential statements, confirming a trend of increased mainstreaming of cross-cutting issues into its decisions. In addition, the Council incorporated such elements as the protection or participation of women in a significant number of decisions adopted in connection with thematic items.

Overall, issues relating to women and peace and security were mainstreamed in such diverse areas as democratic governance and the rule of law, security sector reform, small arms, justice and the protection of human rights, the protection of civilians, humanitarian assistance, conflict prevention and resolution, post-conflict peacebuilding and the fight against HIV/AIDS. In addition, the Council welcomed and encouraged information-sharing and cooperation between the Special Representatives of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and on Sexual Violence in Conflict.

The provisions relating to women and peace and security, which were addressed to relevant Member States, parties to a conflict, the Secretary-General or the international community, include condemnations of discrimination against women and girls, requests for the prevention, investigation, prosecution and reporting of sexual and gender-based violence, and calls for the protection of and assistance to victims, the full and equal participation of women in elections and peace processes, and the imposition of sanctions. The Council included the provisions in its decisions on Afghanistan, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, Côte d’Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Haiti, Liberia, Libya, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, Timor-Leste and the Central African region.

For instance, in relation to the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council adopted a presidential statement following incidents of mass rapes committed by armed groups in the Walikale region in late July and early in August 2010, in which it expressed its readiness to consider all appropriate actions, including targeted measures against the perpetrators, and urged the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to ensure a swift and fair prosecution of the perpetrators and encouraged regular interaction between the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Sexual Violence in Conflict and MONUSCO. During its consideration of the item entitled “Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan”, the Council requested the Secretary-General, for the first time since the adoption of resolution 1960 (2010), to establish monitoring, analysis and reporting arrangements on conflict-related sexual violence and demanded that all parties cease all forms of violence against the civilian population in South Sudan, in particular gender-based violence, with a view to specific and time-bound commitments to combat sexual violence in accordance with resolution 1960 (2010). In connection with the situation in Somalia, the Council decided to impose sanctions (travel ban, asset freeze and arms embargo) on individuals and entities designated as being responsible for violations against civilians, including sexual and gender-based violence. The Council continued to request the Secretary-General to ensure full compliance with the United Nations zero-tolerance policy on sexual abuses and exploitation in a number of peacekeeping missions and urged troop- and police-contributing countries to take action to prevent their personnel from committing such abuses.

Furthermore, provisions related to women and peace and security were incorporated into decisions relating to thematic issues. The Council acknowledged that addressing the root causes of conflicts also required a systematic and comprehensive approach to women and peace and security issues and, reaffirming the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peacebuilding, reiterated its call to increase the equal participation, representation and full involvement of women in preventive diplomacy efforts. In addition, acknowledging the correlated impact of the HIV pandemic and conflict-related sexual violence on women, the Council requested the Secretary-General to include HIV-related concerns to his activities pertinent to the prevention and resolution of conflict, in particular the prevention and response to conflict-related sexual violence.

The following table lists, by item, provisions relating to women and peace and security that were included in decisions adopted under other items. The table does not reflect the integration of provisions on women and peace and security into the mandates of subsidiary bodies, which are covered in part X. Provisions with a specific focus on actions related to women and peace and security are reproduced in full, while those that are broader in scope are indicated by a reference to the corresponding decision and relevant paragraph number.

S/PRST/2010/17
17 September 2010

The Security Council reiterates its strong condemnation of the mass rapes which occurred in the east of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in late July and August 2010, and, reaffirming its resolutions 1820 (2008), 1882 (2009), 1888 (2009), 1894 (2009) and 1925 (2010) and recalling its statements to the press of 26 August and 8 and 9 September 2010, the Council urges the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to ensure a swift and fair prosecution of the perpetrators of these terrible crimes and to inform the Council on measures taken to this end. The Council expresses its readiness to consider all appropriate actions, including targeted measures against the perpetrators (first paragraph)

The Council calls upon the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to condemn these atrocities and to provide effective assistance to the victims of sexual abuse and to support efforts undertaken by all relevant stakeholders, including civil society, to protect and assist the victims and to prevent further violence (third paragraph)
The Council reiterates its urgent call to the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in cooperation with the United Nations and other relevant actors, to put an end to impunity; in particular, those bearing responsibility for gross human rights violations must be held to account. The Council is determined to support the Congolese authorities in addressing the root causes of the above incidents (fourth paragraph).

The Council supports the launch by the Mission and the United Nations country team of a sensitization campaign, including through Radio Okapi, to encourage victims of sexual violence to report it and to seek treatment and legal assistance (eighth paragraph).

The Council reaffirms its resolve to eliminate all forms of violence against women and children during and after armed conflict. It supports the work of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Sexual Violence in Conflict, and encourages her to regularly interact with the Sexual Violence Unit of the Mission to coordinate United Nations response and monitor the implementation of the Comprehensive Strategy on Combating Sexual Violence in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Council looks forward to her trip to the country later in September and requests a briefing upon her return (ninth paragraph).

Calls upon the Congolese authorities to continue their fight against impunity, especially against all perpetrators of human rights and international humanitarian law violations, including sexual violence, including those committed by any illegal armed groups or elements of the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (para. 12).

The Council underlines the importance of economic development to ensure long-term stabilization and peace consolidation.
