31. Women and peace and security

Overview

During the period under review, the Security Council held seven meetings, including one high-level meeting, and adopted two resolutions and two presidential statements in connection with women and peace and security.

In its deliberations, the Council primarily focused on sexual violence in armed conflict and on ways to strengthen accountability for perpetrators as it considered the first and second reports of the Secretary-General on the issue. In addition, Council members discussed progress in implementing resolution 1325 (2000), with a particular focus on ways to enhance women’s participation in conflict prevention, resolution and peacebuilding and improve access to justice and reparations for victims.

In 2012 and 2013, the Council continued to include provisions relating to women and peace and security in its country-specific decisions as well as in decisions relating to other thematic issues.

Table 1 lists the meetings at which the item was considered and gives information on, inter alia, invitees, speakers and decisions adopted. Tables 2 and 3 list relevant provisions in decisions adopted under country-specific and thematic items, respectively.

Sexual violence in armed conflict

On 23 February 2012, the Council considered the first report of the Secretary-General on sexual violence in armed conflict. In her briefing, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Sexual Violence in Conflict underlined the leadership role of the Council on the issue. She noted that the report of the Secretary-General was one of the tools available to combat impunity as it provided political leaders with verified information to track and address sexual violence that was linked to insecurity. It served as a record of best practices and provided a baseline for systematic engagement with parties to armed conflict. She also highlighted the value of listing, in the context of sanctions regimes, as a deterrent against sexual violence.

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations stated that the mandate related to sexual violence in armed conflict was one of the most demanding in peacekeeping. He welcomed the strengthened partnership between the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Special Representative and the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and mentioned examples of concrete progress, including the finalization of the terms of reference of the women’s protection advisers and guidance on the implementation of the monitoring, analysis and reporting arrangements.

The Council was also briefed by the representative of the NGO Working Group on Women, Peace and Security, who said that addressing sexual violence required powerful and urgent leadership at the national, regional and international levels. She added that leadership was essential, in particular in relation to prioritizing prevention, ensuring a survivor-centric approach and strengthening justice and accountability.

Speakers expressed contrasting views on the report and on the mandate of the Special Representative. While most speakers welcomed the availability and use of the data produced through the monitoring, analysis and reporting arrangements, several Member States questioned the reliability and impartiality of the information provided in the report and expressed concerns about the scope and definition of the mandate of the Special Representative. The representative of the Russian Federation argued that attempts to artificially impose on the Council the duty to address sexual violence in all its aspects would lead to imbalances in system-wide coherence and to an erosion of the legitimacy and importance of Council’s decisions on grave, complex and urgent issues. He disagreed with the broad interpretation of the mandate of the Special Representative and warned that unilateral change in the scope of an issue addressed through a special mechanism established as a result of... intergovernmental processes and enshrined in Council resolutions was inadmissible.983 The representative of Pakistan stated that the inclusion in the report of incidents related to elections, civil unrest or political strife ran counter to resolutions 1960 (2010) and 1888 (2009), which limited the debate to situations of armed conflict. For the same reason, he objected to the recommendation of the Special Representative to impose sanctions on all parties named in the report, instead of those mentioned in the annex only.984 In addition, the representatives of Egypt, Nepal and the Syrian Arab Republic expressed concerns about the legitimacy, accuracy and lack of impartiality of the information included in the report on their respective national situations.985 Many speakers, however, valued the information produced through monitoring, analysis and reporting arrangements as a basis for early warning systems, sanctions and comprehensive action on sexual violence, and expressed strong support for the work of the Special Representative.

At the meeting, the Council adopted a presidential statement stressing the need for continued timely, verified, and accurate data collection on sexual violence in situations of armed conflict and post-conflict, which would contribute to better informed discussions and assist the Council in its consideration of appropriate action, possibly including targeted and graduated measures.986 The Council also invited the Special Representative to continue to provide briefings and information consistent with her mandate and the Secretary-General to recommend appropriate actions.

On 17 April 2013, the Council considered the second report of the Secretary-General on sexual violence in armed conflict.987 In his statement, the Secretary-General explained that the report reflected the progressive improvement over the past few years of analysis and data on conflict-related sexual violence as a result of greater awareness on the ground and strengthened capacities of missions to monitor, investigate and respond. In addition, he highlighted a series of trends, including the link between sexual violence and the illicit exploitation of natural resources; the impact of sexual violence on displacement; and the importance of addressing sexual violence during peace negotiations and security sector reform efforts.988 The Special Representative, in reference to the accountability regime established by resolution 1960 (2010), noted that sexual violence had been used through the ages precisely because it was such a cheap and devastating weapon, and stressed the need to reverse that reality, making it a massive liability to commit, command and condone sexual violence in conflict.989 In that regard, she emphasized that political will was most required at the national level to ensure legislation, institutions and capacity to prosecute perpetrators and care for the victims. The representative of the NGO Working Group on Women, Peace and Security emphasized the need for leadership at all levels to address the complexities of conflict-related sexual violence, and highlighted key areas where making progress was essential, namely, participation and equality, prevention, response, accountability and resources.990

Member States exchanged views on specific recommendations provided in the report, including the improvement of the information flow from and to the Council, the importance of considering the inclusion of women protection advisers in mission planning and budgeting, the need to address sexual violence in ceasefire and peace agreements, the availability of comprehensive sexual and reproductive health services for victims, including the safe termination of pregnancy and the establishment of a monitoring mechanism for implementation of time-bound commitments by parties to end sexual violence. While several speakers supported further steps in monitoring more systematically such commitments by parties,991 the representative of the Russian Federation did not encourage the establishment of a special procedure or body for monitoring compliance, arguing that current mechanisms, including the combined work of the Special Representative and the Team of Experts on the Rule of Law and Sexual Violence in Conflict, were sufficient.992 In respect of the role of peacekeeping missions in addressing sexual violence, speakers stressed the importance of increased numbers of uniformed female personnel to facilitate reporting of crimes by victims. The phenomenon of underreporting was acknowledged as one of the main obstacles to accountability. With regard to assistance to victims, several speakers supported the inclusion of emergency contraception and safe abortion in the set of sexual and reproductive health services. The observer of the Holy See, in contrast, expressed concern at the recommendation and argued in favour of increased assistance to women with children born of rape, including the recourse to adoption.

In addition, a number of speakers welcomed the charges against Bosco Ntaganda by the International Criminal Court and others welcomed the Declaration on Preventing Sexual Violence in Conflict, signed by the Group of Eight in London on 11 April 2013.

On 24 June 2013, the Council held a high-level meeting at the initiative of the United Kingdom to discuss accountability issues, with a particular focus on the following areas: responsibility of States to prevent and punish sexual violence; possible complementarity and synergies between international and national accountability mechanisms; and the role of the United Nations in supporting national judicial systems.

The Secretary-General emphasized the importance of national ownership in preventing sexual violence. The representative of the Secretary-General, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General recalled the importance of engaging national stakeholders to foster national ownership, leadership and responsibility.

The Special Envoy of the High Commissioner for Refugees stressed the crucial leadership role of the Council to ensure protection and accountability. The representative of the Women’s Initiative for Gender Justice noted that rape and other forms of sexual violence intensified and increased during times of civil war and armed conflicts, yet too often impunity for those crimes continued to be guaranteed through amnesty laws. She acknowledged the need for leadership on accountability for conflict-related crimes at the national level and stressed the importance of complementarity between national and international systems of accountability.

Following the briefings, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 2106 (2013) in which it affirmed that sexual violence, when used or commissioned as a method or tactic of war or as a part of a widespread or systematic attack against civilian populations, could significantly exacerbate and prolong situations of armed conflict and impede the restoration of international peace and security. The Council also stressed women’s participation as essential to any prevention and protection response. The Council expressed its intent to employ, as appropriate, all means at its disposal to ensure women’s participation in all aspects of mediation, post-conflict recovery and peacemaking and to address sexual violence in conflict, including, inter alia, in the establishment and review of peacekeeping and political mandates, public statements, country visits, fact-finding missions, international commissions of inquiry, consultations with regional bodies and in the work of relevant Security Council sanctions committees. The Council also requested the Secretary-General and relevant United Nations entities to accelerate the establishment and implementation of monitoring, analysis and reporting arrangements and urged existing sanctions committees to apply targeted sanctions against perpetrators.

After the vote, Member States described resolution 2106 (2013) as an important step in consolidating and operationalizing the framework built by previous resolutions on sexual violence. The representative of the United Kingdom stated that a new consciousness and strong action to protect women and children should permeate all of the Council’s peacebuilding efforts.\textsuperscript{1002} The representative of Sweden, speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries, said that the focus on sexual violence should not come at the expense of the broader agenda on women, peace and security.\textsuperscript{1003} In relation to accountability and reparations mechanisms, many speakers stressed the importance of the leadership of national Governments and their commitment to protect women’s rights, guaranteeing the prosecution of conflict-related sexual violence and addressing victims’ needs. A consensus existed regarding the importance of the international community, particularly the United Nations, in providing affected States with the technical assistance and support needed to effectively strengthen national legal systems. However, a number of speakers stressed that international assistance should be implemented with full respect for the sovereignty of States.\textsuperscript{1004} Many speakers acknowledged the positive role of the Team of Experts on the Rule of Law and Sexual Violence in Conflict. The representative of Togo suggested that the United Nations assist in developing or establishing mechanisms of cooperation for the arrest and extradition of alleged perpetrators, and by strengthening the capacity of national courts to avoid the perpetuation of violence.\textsuperscript{1005} The representative of Jordan, however, questioned the credibility of the United Nations in the fight against sexual violence given its handling of sexual exploitation and abuse by peacekeepers and proposed the establishment of a full-fledged legal assistance department to advise States seeking to upgrade or reform their judicial services.\textsuperscript{1006}

In regard to the role of the International Criminal Court, the representative of Estonia recalled that the Rome Statute provided that sexual violence crimes could be committed against both men and women, and stressed that such recognition should be translated into national prosecutions so as to ensure that the gender dimension of atrocity crimes was accounted for to the same extent as it was by the Court.\textsuperscript{1007} The representative of Luxembourg emphasized the responsibility of States to incorporate into their national legislation provisions criminalizing sexual violence and excluding amnesty laws for the most serious crimes, including sexual violence.\textsuperscript{1008} Finally, the representative of Liechtenstein expressed the belief that the Council should be more assertive where national systems failed, through establishing fact-finding commissions, commissions of inquiry and referrals to the Court.\textsuperscript{1009}

Briefing on women and peace and security

On 24 April 2012, the Executive Director of the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) and the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations briefed the Council. The Executive Director of UN-Women addressed the engagement of women in conflict resolution and transitional justice. She expressed concern that women’s engagement and contribution to democratization had not translated into greater presence or influence at the leadership and decision-making levels. She advised that concrete measures were needed to systematize women’s participation in national dialogues in transition contexts, in international contact group meetings and donor conferences. She suggested that the Council should encourage mediators, envoys, advisers and Member States to include women in the process of conflict resolution. She invited Member States to actively use the gender expertise made available through the Department of Political Affairs-UN-Women joint strategy on gender and mediation to make their mediation and prevention efforts more inclusive. In respect of accountability, she stressed the importance that the International Residual Mechanism for the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda and the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia include a specific review of the lessons learned from the prosecution of sexual and gender-based crimes, and stated that those lessons should be applied in the work of the International Criminal Court and in peacekeeping missions assisting domestic actors to prosecute such crimes. With regard to transitional justice, she welcomed the inclusion of strong gender analysis in the reports of commissions of inquiry and stressed the need for implementation and follow-up action. Finally, she expressed concern about the threat of loss of gains on women’s legal rights in post-

Conflict situations. She said that the Council should pay particular attention to ensuring that women’s rights were not eroded during mission drawdowns, and urged it to support increased numbers of women in leadership positions, constitution-making processes and the justice and security work of United Nations missions.1010

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations focused his remarks on security, protection and equal participation of women in countries where peacekeeping missions were located. He said that under the leadership of the special representatives of the Secretary-General, missions could provide an extremely powerful platform for support to women in post-conflict situations1011 and highlighted in particular their role in supporting women’s participation in elections. In spite of the initiatives and measures put in place by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to enhance protection of women, he acknowledged that more needed to be done in the area of protection by host countries and peacekeepers alike, particularly against sexual and gender-based violence. He called for, inter alia, renewed efforts to be made to strengthen judicial and military institutions as well as for the establishment of security institutions with clear modalities of operation and elements that are regularly trained and that act in compliance with international law and standards.1012

Contribution of women’s civil society organizations to the prevention of armed conflict

On 31 October 2012, the Council held an open debate on the item entitled “Women and peace and security”, having before it the concept note prepared by the President of the Council (Guatemala).1013 After the debate, the Council adopted a presidential statement, in which it recognized the need for more systematic attention to the implementation of women and peace and security commitments in its own work. The Council also underlined the need for continued appropriate and regular training for gender advisers as well as the need to ensure that gains made in the protection and promotion of women’s and girls’ rights were sustained, and stressed the importance of promoting and protecting the human rights of women and girls in the context of the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000).1014

On 30 November 2012, the Council held its annual debate on women and peace and security, at which it considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000).1015 In his statement, the Deputy Secretary-General said that one of the key messages of the report was that early and sustained engagement with women was crucial to ensuring the sustainability of peace efforts. He stressed that actively engaging women must be a priority, not an afterthought, and that the challenge was to become more systematic in supporting women’s organizations in their efforts towards peace and in making the necessary links to formal peace processes. The Deputy Secretary-General added that issues relating to the women and peace and security agenda should not be addressed just once a year.1016

The Executive Director of UN-Women presented the report of the Secretary-General1015 and pointed out the shortage of opportunities for women to engage in conflict resolution and peacebuilding, despite the availability of women’s leadership, and underlined the need to create such opportunities.1017 The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations stated that women could and should play a leading role in political participation, conflict resolution and the transition from conflict to peace, and emphasized the critical role of active and systematic consultation with local actors and leaders to develop effective, context-specific and gender-aware solutions.1018 The representative of the NGO Working Group on Women, Peace and Security called on the Council to engage with women’s groups as key partners in peace, to prioritize women’s rights, to meet regularly with women’s groups and women leaders and to ensure that women’s priorities were substantively incorporated into all relevant negotiations.1019

Most speakers acknowledged the disproportionate impact of conflict on women and the relevance of their participation in peacemaking processes. They recognized the important role of women civil society organizations and deplored the lack of security for women’s rights defenders. Many speakers also welcomed the inclusion of the protection of civilians in the mandates of 8 of the 16 peacekeeping missions, the establishment of early warning mechanisms and increased support for women’s participation in mediation efforts and preventive diplomacy. The representative of Mexico expressed regret that peace processes and accords rarely included concrete provisions which would enable inclusive access to power, which perpetuated the exclusion and vulnerable conditions in which women lived. He added that the inclusion of women’s organizations in peace processes was necessary to overcome injustices and offered an opportunity to avoid structural problems of exclusion in the design of inclusive national institutions.\textsuperscript{1020}

The representative of Liechtenstein highlighted the need to ensure that the perspective of women’s civil society organizations was taken into account when rethinking how gender expertise was structured and deployed in the United Nations system.\textsuperscript{1021} Similarly, the Special Representative for Women, Peace and Security of the Secretary-General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) stated that civil society played an important role as a source of information and accountability. Stressing that her organization aimed at greater female participation in areas of defence and security, she noted that having gender expertise and more female soldiers in the field enhanced the ability of NATO to conduct operations more effectively.\textsuperscript{1022} Many speakers encouraged the deployment of female peacekeepers and police personnel, women protection advisers and gender advisers within United Nations missions, and representatives of troop-contributing countries underlined their active role in sending uniformed women peacekeepers, to the missions, who served in a variety of capacities.

In respect of the report of the Secretary-General, the representative of the Russian Federation stated that there had been no serious analysis of the information gathered and that it was, therefore, impossible to understand the data, assess its value or draw specific conclusions about the status of women.\textsuperscript{1023} Acknowledging that indicators constituted a potentially important tool for designing prevention and protection mechanisms, the representative of Colombia emphasized that the indicators should be used in strict conformity to the mandate laid out in the relevant resolutions, and that findings should not be used out of context.\textsuperscript{1024}

Women, rule of law and transitional justice in conflict-affected situations

On 18 October 2013, the Council adopted resolution 2122 (2013), in which it emphasized that persisting barriers to full implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) would only be dismantled through dedicated commitment to women’s empowerment, participation and human rights and through concerted leadership, consistent information and action, and support, to build women’s engagement in all levels of decision-making. The Council expressed its intention to focus more attention on women’s leadership and participation in conflict resolution and peacebuilding, as well as on women, peace and security issues in all relevant thematic areas on its agenda. The Council also welcomed more regular briefings by the Executive Director of UN-Women and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Sexual Violence in Conflict. In addition, the Council requested the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Political Affairs and relevant senior officials to update the Council on issues relevant to women, peace and security and to systematically include information and recommendations on issues of relevance to women, peace and security in the reports to the Council. The Council also invited all United Nations-established commissions of inquiry investigating situations on its agenda to include information on the differentiated impacts of armed conflict on women and girls. The Council recognized the continuing need to increase women’s participation and the consideration of gender-related issues in all discussions, the Council requested the Special Envoys and Special Representatives of the Secretary-General to regularly consult with women’s organizations and women leaders, and requested the Secretary-General to strengthen the knowledge of negotiating delegations to peace talks, and members of mediation support teams, on the gender dimensions of peacebuilding. In addition, the Council invited the Secretary-General to commission a global study on the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000), highlighting good practice examples, implementation gaps and challenges in preparation for the 2015 high-level review.\textsuperscript{1025}

Following the vote, speakers welcomed the unanimous adoption of resolution 2122 (2013), seventh in the series of resolutions on women and peace and security, and acknowledged the role of the Council in establishing a comprehensive body of norms. The representative of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) welcomed the adoption of the resolution and recognized the role of regional organizations in implementing women, peace and security commitments. She stated that there was a good window of opportunity to give women, peace and security issues a boost at the regional level as the United Nations was currently leading a process of strengthening the role of regional organizations under Chapter VIII of the Charter, dealing with conflict prevention.\textsuperscript{1026}

The Council had before it the report of the Secretary-General\textsuperscript{1027} and a concept note prepared by the President of the Council (Azerbaijan).\textsuperscript{1028} Speakers welcomed the opportunity to discuss the gender implications of the rule of law and highlighted the link between the establishment of gender-sensitive judicial mechanisms and the sustainability of peacebuilding efforts. The representative of Sweden stated that improving women’s access to justice should include an analysis of the systemic barriers of gender inequality and that gender awareness in the rule of law had a direct impact on women’s political and economic empowerment.\textsuperscript{1029} Many speakers also agreed that periods of transition offered opportunities for women to advance and institutionalize their interests and needs and to secure their rights as equal citizens, thus preventing further abuse. In that context, the importance of informal justice mechanisms and reparations programmes was acknowledged as well as the need for transitional justice to address the full-range of conflict-related violations against women’s rights, and for women to fully participate in judicial reforms and institutions.

Noting that much attention had focused on prevention and protection issues, particularly in connection with sexual violence in armed conflict, some speakers stressed the need also to address the issue of participation of women in all decision-making processes, the third pillar of resolution 1325 (2000). Speakers welcomed the progress achieved in that area despite the need to address remaining implementation gaps. Several speakers stressed the need for a more consistent inclusion of women, peace and security-related provisions in the mandates of missions. In that connection, the representative of the Russian Federation urged States to avoid predetermined actions and to be mindful of individual situations.\textsuperscript{1030} The representative of Chile expressed concern at the declining number of women among the middle and high levels of mission leadership staff, the scarcity of gender and age-segregated data and the gap in financing.\textsuperscript{1031} The representative of Brazil stated that women’s participation in the maintenance of international peace and security remained insufficient and that supporting and promoting such participation was an increasingly important aspect of the Council’s responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations.\textsuperscript{1032}

\textsuperscript{1025} On 26 October 2010, in a statement by the President, the Council expressed its intention to convene a high-level review to assess progress in the implementation of resolution 1325 (2010) (see S/PRST/2010/22).

Mainstreaming of issues relating to women and peace and security in the decisions of the Security Council

During the period under review, the Security Council continued to include provisions relevant to women, peace and security in its country-specific decisions and in decisions relating to other thematic issues.1033

Table 2 features instances of such inclusion in resolutions and statements by the President adopted in connection with country-specific items. Table 3 features provisions relevant to women and peace and security in decisions adopted under other thematic items. Provisions relating to the mandates of peacekeeping operations and political and peacebuilding missions are featured in the tables only if they concern specifically: (a) the deployment of women’s protection advisers and gender advisers; and (b) the role of a particular mission with regard to monitoring, analysis and reporting arrangements.1034

During the period under review, in decisions relating to country or regional-specific items (see table 2), provisions relevant to women and peace and security included calls on Governments and parties to support women’s engagement in peace and political processes, condemnations of violations against women and requests to concerned parties to armed conflict to make specific and time-bound commitments to combat sexual violence. In several decisions, the Council requested the establishment or further implementation of monitoring, analysis and reporting arrangements on conflict-related sexual violence and called for the deployment of women protection and gender advisers to various peacekeeping and political missions. The Council also decided to adopt targeted measures against perpetrators or expressed its strong intention to do so when considering a number of situations on its agenda.

In decisions related to thematic items (see table 3), the Council stressed the importance of adopting a gender perspective in various areas relating to the maintenance of international peace and security. In addition, in resolution 2122 (2013), the Council expressed its intention to increase its attention to women and peace and security in all relevant thematic areas of work on its agenda, including threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts.1035

1033 In its presidential statement of 31 October 2012, the Council recognized the need for more systematic attention to the implementation of women and peace and security commitments in its own work to, inter alia, continue to integrate appropriate gender perspectives into the mandates of relevant United Nations peacekeeping missions as well as in other relevant thematic areas of peace and security (S/PRST/2012/23).

1034 For more information on mandates and decisions relating to peacekeeping operations and political and peacebuilding missions, see part X.

1035 See also resolution 2129 (2013), in connection with the item entitled “Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts”. Although the Council had previously included a reference to women in resolutions 1988 (2011) and 2082 (2012), adopted under the same item, those resolutions addressed specifically the review of delisting requests by the Committee pursuant to resolutions 1267 (1999) and 1989 (2011) concerning Al-Qaeda and associated individuals and entities and by the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1988 (2011), respectively.

The situation in Mali

Resolution 2056 (2012) (adopted under Chapter VII)

Calls upon all parties in the north of Mali to cease all abuses of human rights and violations of international humanitarian law, condemns in particular the targeted attacks against the civilian population, sexual violence, recruitment and use of child soldiers and forced displacement, recalls in this regard all its relevant resolutions on women and peace and security, on children and armed conflict, and on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, and stresses that the perpetrators shall be brought to justice (para. 13)

The situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo

Resolution 2098 (2013) (adopted under Chapter VII)

Strongly condemns the 23 March Movement, the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the Allied Democratic Forces, the Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain, the Lord’s Resistance Army, the Forces nationales de libération, the various Mai Mai groups and all other armed groups and their continuing violence and abuses of human rights, including summary executions, sexual and gender-based violence and the large-scale recruitment and use of children, demands that all armed groups cease immediately all forms of violence and destabilizing activities and that their members immediately and permanently disband and lay down their arms, and reiterates that those responsible for human rights abuses and violations of international humanitarian law will be held accountable and should not be eligible for integration into the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo or other elements of State security forces (para. 8)

The situation in Somalia

Resolution 2067 (2012)

Strongly condemns the grave and systematic violations and human rights abuses perpetrated by many parties and in particular by Al-Shabaab and its affiliates against the civilian population, including violence against children, journalists and human rights defenders and sexual violence against women and children, and calls for the immediate cessation of such acts, and emphasizes the need for accountability for all such violations and abuses (para. 18)

Resolution 2093 (2013) (adopted under Chapter VII)

Condemns all attacks against civilians in Somalia, calls for the immediate cessation of all acts of violence, including sexual and gender-based violence, or abuses committed against civilians, including women and children, and humanitarian personnel in violation of international humanitarian law and human rights law, stresses the responsibility of all parties in Somalia to comply with their obligations to protect the civilian population from the effects of hostilities, in particular by avoiding any indiscriminate attacks or excessive use of force, and underscores the need to end impunity, uphold human rights and hold those who commit crimes accountable (para. 26)

The situation in the Central African Republic

Resolution 2088 (2013)

Strongly condemns the continued violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, including the recruitment and use of children, the killing and maiming of civilians, including of children, rape and sexual slavery and other forms of sexual and gender-based violence and abductions, and the targeting of ethnic minorities perpetrated by armed groups, and specifically the Lord’s Resistance Army, that threaten the population as well as the peace and stability of the Central African Republic and the subregion, and requests the United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in the Central African Republic to report on these human rights abuses and other violations perpetrated by armed groups, particularly against children and women (para. 13)

32. Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts

Overview

During the period under review, the Security Council held four meetings, and adopted three resolutions, two of them under Chapter VII, and two statements by the President under the item entitled “Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts”.

Strengthening international cooperation

In his briefing to the Council on 4 May 2012, the Secretary-General underlined the need to focus on the conditions that were conducive to spreading terrorism, and to pursue an integrated approach to terrorism and violent extremism embodied in the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy. He also urged Member States to make full use of the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force, and emphasized that the international community must work as one. For that reason, he hoped that Member States would decide to create the position of a United Nations counter-terrorism coordinator. He also noted the critical role of the newly established United Nations Counter-Terrorism Centre, within the Office of the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force.1036

Speakers highlighted the increasingly close links between terrorist organizations and transnational organized crime. They underscored the value of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy and called for its full implementation. Some speakers stressed the importance of the respect for rule of law, both in combating terrorism and as a measure to prevent terrorism from growing.1037 The Secretary-General’s proposal to appoint a counter-terrorism coordinator was supported by some countries,1038 while others signalled their readiness to engage in discussions in respect of such a position in the context of the overall efforts of the United Nations in combating terrorism.1039 In addition, several speakers called for the conclusion of a comprehensive convention on international terrorism.1040

At the same meeting the Council adopted a presidential statement,1041 in which it noted with concern that terrorism continued to pose a serious threat to international peace and security. The Council also expressed concern regarding the increasing connection between terrorism and transnational organized crime, and recognized the efforts of Member States to conclude negotiations on the draft comprehensive convention on international terrorism. The Council reaffirmed that Member States should ensure that measures taken to combat terrorism complied with international law, in particular international human rights law. The Council stressed the importance of the implementation of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy and took note of the recommendation to appoint a United Nations Counter-Terrorism Coordinator.

Extension of the sanctions against Al-Qaida and the Taliban and of the mandates of the Office of the Ombudsperson and the Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team

At its meeting on 17 December 2012, acting under Chapter VII, the Council adopted resolutions 2082 (2012) and 2083 (2012), thereby renewing the sanctions measures with respect to Al-Qaida and the Taliban as well as other individuals, groups, undertakings and entities associated with Al-Qaida and the Taliban. The measures included an asset freeze, travel ban and arms embargo. Furthermore, the resolutions renewed the mandate of the Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team to support the committees responsible for the implementation of the resolutions. The Council, in resolution 2083 (2012), also decided that the Ombudsperson should continue to receive requests for delisting and should present to the
