Safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel

Report of the Secretary-General

Summary

The increasingly complex global security landscape presents a persistent challenge as the international community continues to respond to humanitarian needs across the globe. These needs, often the dire consequences of instability and conflict, have been growing apace while root causes remain unresolved.

In fulfilling United Nations mandates on development, human rights, peace and security, and humanitarian support, United Nations personnel are working in challenging and high-risk contexts and have been targets of diverse threats from armed conflict, crime and terrorism. This report presents an overview of the global security challenges we are facing, their impact on the safety and security of humanitarian and United Nations personnel, the Organization’s response, and efforts by the United Nations Department of Safety and Security to meet the rising demand for system-wide security management to enable United Nations work worldwide. The report includes observations and recommendations for consideration by the Assembly.

I. Introduction

1. In its resolution 72/131, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly, at its seventy-third session, a comprehensive and updated report on the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel and on the implementation of the resolution. It also requested that the Secretary-General include in his report an assessment of the impact of safety and security risks on such personnel, and of the development, implementation and outcomes of policies, strategies and initiatives of the United Nations system in the field of safety and security.

2. The present report covers the 18-month period from January 2017 to June 2018. It presents an overview of the global security environment, the associated security threats, risks and challenges facing United Nations personnel, the Organization’s response to these threats, the strategic challenges faced by the Organization and concludes with observations and recommendations for consideration by the Assembly.

II. Security threats against United Nations personnel

A. Global security environment

3. Through its efforts to reach the Sustainable Development Goals, the international community is engaged in long-term actions aimed at addressing the root causes of insecurity. Strategic long-term indicators on sustainable development are gradually improving. Extreme poverty has declined around the world, global life expectancy has increased and access to essential drinking water and electricity has improved. However, in 2017, more than 128 million people needed humanitarian assistance and the number of forcibly displaced people worldwide surpassed 68 million. Overall, the global security environment remains highly complex and challenging. Heightened global insecurity continues to challenge states’ security apparatus and efforts to define and address security challenges worldwide.

1 For the purpose of this report, the term “United Nations personnel” refers to all personnel covered by the United Nations security management system, including United Nations system personnel, United Nations Volunteers, individually deployed military and police personnel in peacekeeping or special political missions, consultants, individual contractors, experts on mission and other officials with a direct contractual agreement with an organization of the United Nations system. The term does not refer to military members of national contingents or members of formed police units when deployed with their contingent. The United Nations security management system is responsible for approximately 180,000 personnel according to the United Nations Security Managers Information Network database.

3 World Bank’s Taking on Inequality
4. Political and social polarization built on economic disparities and populism, competition for natural resources and environmental degradation, fragmented non-state armed actors and the absence of political solution to evolving conflicts remain the main contributing factors to insecurity in 2017. These are exacerbated by the continuing blurring of lines between criminal cartels, non-state armed groups and extremist organizations.

5. The growing interconnectedness of human networks has contributed to raising expectations and demands from populations seeking social, economic and political changes. Notwithstanding their benefits, these networks have provided platforms for extremists and criminals. Cybersecurity, artificial intelligence and relatively new technologies available to the public such as unmanned aerial vehicles present additional security challenges.

6. There has been an overall decline in the number of deaths from terrorist attacks globally. The capacity of the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) has been significantly reduced through the loss of a large proportion of its territory in Iraq and in the Syrian Arab Republic. The group has evolved into a global network with a flat hierarchy and less logistical and operational control over its affiliates. However, ISIL’s capacity to incite attacks and inflict harm on civilians in many parts of the world continues. The year 2017 saw sophisticated and well-coordinated attacks employing the use of explosive devices in various parts of countries such as Afghanistan and Somalia, including their capitals. In Europe, attacks were less frequent and on a smaller scale than in the previous reporting periods and relied heavily on unsophisticated methods such as ramming vehicles into pedestrians or attacking victims with knives. While many ISIL members remain in Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic, sizeable numbers of ISIL-affiliated fighters are suspected to have relocated to Afghanistan, Libya, the Sahel region, the Sinai Peninsula, Somalia and Yemen as well as in South East Asia and West Africa. In parallel, Al Qaida and its affiliates shows resilience and remains stronger than ISIL in some areas, for example, in Somalia. Al Shabaab has retained its capability to carry out massive attacks in Somalia and continues to pose a serious threat to peace and development in the country.

7. More than ever, due to protracted conflicts and lack of political solutions, situations in areas of armed conflict have further deteriorated, causing destructions, deaths, injuries, and further population displacements. In addition, new conflict areas have emerged in the Democratic Republic of Congo and the Central African Republic, generating additional humanitarian needs to avert immediate threats of famines and epidemic. With continuing attacks against civilians and humanitarian workers in conflict areas, disregard for international humanitarian law and human rights law remains endemic. Humanitarian personnel face significant threats, including harassment and intimidation, criminality, and direct and indirect attacks, especially against frontline workers. In 2017, there were 322 attacks on health care, an increase from 302 in 2016.

8. The international community continues to call upon the United Nations to carry out programmes and operations, not only in complex and dangerous areas of armed conflict, but also in all 125 countries where the United Nations are normally deployed to fulfil development, human rights, and peace and security mandate. In addition, United Nations personnel, together with humanitarian partners, responded to an increasing number of natural disasters, affecting most particularly small countries and vulnerable areas. In September 2017 alone, three major hurricanes (Irma, Jose and Maria) hit the islands of Antigua and Barbuda, Anguilla, Bahamas, British Virgin Islands, Cuba, Puerto Rico, Saint Barthelemy, Saint Martin and Saint Maarten, and Turks and Caicos. Approximately 2.6 million people were affected.

- Types of incidents and their impact on United Nations personnel

9. Overall, security and safety related incidents affected 1,473 United Nations personnel in 2017, compared to 1,381 in 2016, which represents an increase of around six per cent (see figure 1). This figure is, however, lower than the average number of personnel affected annually (1,596) over the period from 2011 to 2017.

8 The United Nations Security Management System is composed of all United Nations system organizations and other international organizations that have signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the United Nations for the purpose of security.
10. In 2017, a total of nine United Nations civilian personnel lost their lives due to direct acts of violence, compared to 10 in 2016. In the first six months of 2018, five United Nations personnel lost their lives due to violence, already an increase compared to the first six months of 2017 (see figure II). These casualties occurred in Afghanistan, the Central African Republic, Cameroon, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Somalia and South Sudan. Each year since 2015, United Nations personnel have lost their lives in attacks in Somalia. Seventy United Nations personnel were injured in acts of violence in 2017, the same number recorded in 2016.

11. In 2017, the number of personnel losing their lives due to acts of violence marked the lowest figure since 2011 (see figure II), despite the increased presence of the United Nations in complex security environments.

12. The number of direct attacks against United Nations premises decreased substantially in 2017. There were 23 attacks against United Nations premises in 2017, compared to 56 attacks in 2016. In addition, the number of attacks against United Nations official vehicles decreased, with 51 attacks against vehicles in 2017, compared to 146 attacks in 2016 (see Annex II). Moreover, 32 United Nations official vehicles were destroyed or lost as a result of these attacks. Most of these attacks occurred in the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Haiti, Mali, Sudan (Darfur), South Sudan and Yemen. In this reporting period, the data on direct attacks against United Nations premises and vehicles were collected using a different method that applied a more stringent definition of armed attacks and did not include relatively minor events. This explains the substantial decrease in the numbers reported.

13. Of the nine fatalities due to violence in 2017, six personnel lost their lives as a result of criminal acts, two lost their lives as a result of armed conflict and one was killed in an extremist attack (see figure III and Annex III). Notably, the one fatality caused by a terrorist attack, which took place in Mogadishu on 14 October 2017, was the result of the deadliest bombing in Somalia’s recent history with over 500 people killed and over 300 injured.

Figure III
United Nations personnel fatalities by category of threat
Crime

14. Although crime remains the main cause of personnel fatalities due to acts of violence, the number of United Nations personnel affected by crimes has steadily decreased since 2014 (see figure IV). From 2013 to 2017, an average of 55 per cent of United Nations personnel fatalities was due to violent crimes. From January to June 2018, 395 personnel reported being directly affected by crime, which suggests that the figure for the entire year will be similar to that for 2017. During 2017, locally-recruited personnel were affected to a greater extent by crime compared to internationally recruited personnel. Of the 883 United Nations personnel affected by crime, 536 (around 61 per cent) were locally-recruited, compared to 347 internationally recruited personnel.

15. Of the 1,473 United Nations personnel affected by security incidents in 2017, 883 (around 60 per cent) were victims of criminal acts which included robberies, residence break-ins, burglaries, and aggravated and sexual assault (see figure IV and Annex III). This number was similar to the figure for 2016.

Figure IV
United Nations personnel affected by crime, by category
Terrorism

16. There was one casualty resulting from an act of terrorism in 2017, following a consistent decrease in the numbers of personnel killed in such circumstance in the last three years (see figure V). While one casualty remains a heavy loss for relatives and for the Organization, the overall decrease is to be welcome as United Nations personnel continue to operate in areas affected by extremist threats.

Figure V
United Nations personnel fatalities due to terrorism

Abduction of United Nations personnel

17. In 2017, eight United Nations personnel were victims of abductions that developed into hostage situations (see figure VI), comparable to 2016, when seven personnel were abducted. All the eight United Nations personnel abducted in 2017 were locally recruited male personnel. They were abducted by non-state actors in Afghanistan, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Nigeria, Sudan and South Sudan. In the first six months of 2018, three personnel were abducted in Afghanistan and two in South Sudan. Four abducted personnel were safely released but one was killed by the captors in Afghanistan.
18. In 2017, 13 United Nations personnel lost their lives as a result of safety-related incidents, compared to 11 in 2016. As well, 111 personnel were injured, compared to 93 in 2016 (see Annex I). Similar to previous years, most injuries related to safety incidents have been from road crashes (see Annex III and figure VII). In 2017, more United Nations personnel were killed and injured as a result of road traffic accidents (12 and 103, respectively) than as a result of violence (nine and 70, respectively). Further, as a result of traffic accidents involving United Nations vehicles, 47 persons not affiliated with the United Nations lost their lives and 260 others were injured.
19. In January 2017, the United Nations has adopted an internal system-wide Road Safety Strategy which aims to reduce the number of road-related deaths and injuries by 50 per cent by 2020, in line with the objectives of the United Nations Decade of Action on Road Safety. The Internal Road Safety Strategy was welcomed by the General Assembly in April 2018 through its Resolution on “Improving global road safety”9. However, to reach this goal, the UN system must start the effective implementation of the new road safety strategy and, together with Members States and UN organizations, provide required support through the United Nations Department of Safety and Security (UNDSS)’s Trust Fund to establish a more coordinated and collective approach on Road Safety.

Intimidation and harassment

20. Following the peak in the number of incidents of intimidation and harassment of United Nations personnel in 2015 with 405 incidents, the number of this type of incident had been decreasing in recent past years. This reporting period, however, saw an increase in this type of incident, from 231 in 2016 to 316 reported cases in 2017.

9 General Assembly resolution 72/271
Arrests and detention of United Nations personnel

21. In 2017, 63 United Nations personnel were arrested or detained by national authorities of Member States, compared to 102 arrests and detentions in 2016 (see Annex I). This is a significant decrease of around 38 per cent. In the first six months of 2018, 42 personnel were arrested; this is a slight decrease compared to 53 arrested in the first half of 2017. Currently, 29 United Nations personnel remain in detention. Most of the arrests were related to violations of national laws. The decrease in the number of arrest and detention is likely due to the United Nations' strengthened efforts, in collaboration with Member States, to promote personnel awareness on road safety and to ensure respect for national laws.

Gender-related security incidents

22. Female personnel represent approximately 40 per cent of all United Nations personnel in the field. In 2017, female United Nations personnel accounted for 38 per cent of the security incidents (see Annex III). There has been a notable rise in the number of sexual assaults of United Nations personnel recorded in 2017 (with 28 cases), compared to the previous four years where, on average, 10 cases per year were reported. In the first six months of 2018, three cases were reported. The majority of personnel affected in 2017 were women (57 per cent), though a significant number of men were assaulted.

23. The United Nations security management system and the broader humanitarian and development community continue efforts to improve conditions for reporting and the system for reporting sexual assault incidents. These efforts include training and awareness raising as well as the development of an internal policy framework to address sexual harassment and violence in the work place.

2. Security of locally recruited United Nations personnel

24. In 2017, locally recruited personnel comprised 65 per cent of United Nations personnel affected by safety and security incidents. Their larger presence in the field, as compared to internationally recruited personnel, has traditionally explained the larger number of incidents affecting them. In 2017, locally recruited personnel faced a higher ratio of deadly attacks than did internationally recruited personnel, with 67 per cent of United Nations personnel killed as a result of violent acts being locally recruited. This, however, is a decrease from the previous year, where, 90 per cent of those who lost their lives as a result of violence were locally recruited. Also, locally recruited personnel were more affected than their internationally recruited colleagues by arrest and detention, abduction, intimidation, harassment and assault. International personnel are, however, affected to a greater extent than locally-recruited personnel by burglary, residence break-in and robbery.

25. The United Nations is taking concrete steps to adopt a system-wide approach to improve the security of locally-recruited personnel. In June 2018, the United Nations Inter-Agency Security Management Network approved a system-wide policy on “Security of Locally Recruited Personnel.”

3. Impact of the global security environment on United Nations programmes

26. In an increasingly complex security environment, effective security management has enabled the delivery of United Nations programmes and activities in high-threat environments, such as in Afghanistan, Iraq, Libya, Nigeria, Somalia, Syria and Yemen. In 2017, the Department enabled more than 2,500 humanitarian missions in Iraq, Libya, Syria and Yemen.

27. During the reporting period, the Department provided security management support for 1,260 humanitarian missions, including participation in 181 humanitarian missions jointly with other United Nations entities to enable the delivery of much needed assistance to the affected population of Yemen. In particular, the Department conducted critical security assessment missions in various affected locations in the country in close coordination with all parties concerned which facilitated the conduct of humanitarian operation across the conflict line from Ibb to Taiz. In Syria, security support enabled the United Nations to carry out 657 critical inter-agency humanitarian missions across the country. In Libya, the number of field missions undertaken in very high threat areas doubled between 2016 and 2017, while the Organization was increasing the number of security assessments it conducted. Following a review of the security risk and the implementation of required security risk management measures, the evacuation status on Libya was lifted in February 2018.

11 The UNRWA data are based on security incidents reported to and recorded in the UNRWA Security Information Management System. UNRWA area personnel are not covered by the United Nations security management system. As such, the overall statistics contained in the present report does not cover security incidents that affected UNRWA area personnel.
28. The complex security environment described above affects similarly other actors working with United Nations personnel. Humanitarian personnel of non-governmental organizations (NGOs), the area staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) and peacekeepers have seen an increase in security incidents or in fatalities.

1. Impact of security threats on humanitarian personnel of non-governmental organizations

29. From January 2017 to June 2018, 60 NGO personnel working in close cooperation with the United Nations lost their lives as a result of acts of violence and 113 personnel were abducted, according to reports received by the Department (see figure VIII and Annex IV). The number of casualties has increased from 51 fatalities in the previous reporting period.

30. According to the reports received, 96 NGO personnel were injured as a result of acts of violence in the reporting period. This is an increase from the number of injuries from the previous period (77). The number of reported attacks on NGO vehicles has decreased, with 157 reported incidents of attacks on vehicles, a decrease from 251 reported incidents in the previous reporting period.

31. As in previous years, NGOs shared reports on security incidents with the Department of Safety and Security on a voluntary basis. The data are likely to be incomplete and cannot be verified or compared with other existing databases that use different terminology and methodology. To increase collaboration and collective work on security incidents affecting humanitarian workers would require significant time and investment and the full support of the NGO community.

10 Such as the Aid Worker Security database.
2. Security incidents affecting the area staff of UNRWA

32. Employing over 30,000 area personnel in five fields of operation, UNRWA\textsuperscript{11} delivers a range of humanitarian assistance to over five million Palestine refugees. In 2017, there was a significant increase in the number of UNRWA area personnel affected by security incidents (239, as compared to 205 in 2016), with most of these incidents arising from interactions with dissatisfied beneficiaries (such as intimidation and aggravated assault incidents, see Annex V). Twenty-one staff were arrested and detained in 2017. There were no fatalities in 2017 or the first half of 2018, a decrease from the four reported cases of fatalities in 2016. UNRWA launched extensive security training efforts towards the end of 2016 and in 2017.

\textsuperscript{11} The UNRWA data are based on security incidents reported to and recorded in the UNRWA Security Information Management System. UNRWA area personnel are not covered by the United Nations security management system. As such, the overall statistics contained in the present report does not cover security incidents that affected UNRWA area personnel.
3. Comparison with peacekeepers\(^{12}\)

33. Fatalities among uniformed peacekeepers due to violent acts dramatically increased to 61 in 2017, compared to 34 recorded in 2016. The number of uniformed peacekeepers' fatalities for 2017 is the highest number on record since 1994.

34. Across all 14 peacekeeping operations, the main security threats for uniformed peacekeepers remain armed attacks against moving or stationary positions. They are exposed to rockets, mortars and artillery fire, vehicle- and/or person-borne improvised explosive devices and landmines. The main security threats in the peacekeeping environment continued to be individual or isolated armed groups, extremists, organized criminal gangs and political exploitation. Of concern is the indication of an increased complexity of attacks against uniformed peacekeepers. In December 2017, 15 peacekeepers lost their lives in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in one single incident, the deadliest attack against peacekeepers in nearly 25 years.

III. Strengthening the security management system

35. To meet the challenges of operating in the complex security environment, the United Nations Security Management System, led by the Department of Safety and Security continued its efforts to enable the United Nations to conduct mandated programmes and activities safely and efficiently.

A. Enhancing security risk management capacity for security decision-makers

1. Enhanced support to Designated Officials

36. Noting that the Designated Official is usually the most senior United Nations official in the designated area, the Department has actively engaged with them to strengthen their capacity as security decision-makers. In 2017, under the auspices of the Under-Secretary-General for Safety and Security, 110 Designated Officials, together with their senior security advisers and representatives of United Nations system organizations, participated in five regional workshops to enhance their understanding of security policies and address operational concerns and challenges. The Department revised and distributed the Designated Official \(^{12}\) For the purposes of this report, “peacekeepers” are personnel of contingent troops and formed police units. They are not covered by the United Nations security management system.

Handbook, which offers practical, comprehensive and updated advice on security management and decision making. In 2017, a total of 1,007 United Nations personnel with security decision-making authority have completed the online Security Management Team learning course. Finally, the Department is developing specific training to support Designated Officials in the management of security-related crisis with a view to train 120 Designated Officials in 2019.

2. Strengthening security decisions

37. Balancing the need to carry out critical programmes with security is essential in high-threat areas. The Programme Criticality Framework is a United Nations system-wide policy to assist in the decision-making on the acceptable security risk. The Framework ensures that the delivery of activities involving United Nations personnel can be balanced against acceptable levels of security risks. During the reporting period, the United Nations carried out 31 Programme Criticality assessments in 25 countries.

38. The United Nations continued to increase the effectiveness and consistent application of the Programme Criticality Framework and to foster its link to security risk management and decisions on acceptable security risk. Efforts included the provision of oversight and operational guidance to United Nations operations in the field as well as training for United Nations personnel, and the completion of a lessons-learned study on the implementation of the Programme Criticality Framework. In Kenya and Liberia, the Programme Criticality assessments undertaken prior to national elections held in 2017, facilitated the delivery of critical United Nations activities and assisted the Designated Officials in taking informed security decisions on acceptable risk in a potential crisis area. In Iraq, Somalia, Syria and Yemen, the results of Programme Criticality assessments helped the Designated Officials in determining the scope of United Nations presence.

3. Duty of Care

39. Following an effort initiated in 2014 in light of the changing operational environment, the High-Level Committee on Management approved, in April 2018, system-wide measures for United Nations personnel such as pre-deployment packages for national and international personnel, specific training and support for managers, as well as standards for working and living conditions for personnel deployed to high-risk environments.
B. Reinforcing security risk management strategies

1. Completing the framework of safety and security policies

40. Strengthening the regulatory framework to guide and support security operations, policy development and decision-making remains the key focus of the United Nations security management system. In June 2018, the Inter-Agency Security Management Network endorsed new policies and guidelines on security planning, security of locally-recruited personnel, and compliance, evaluation and best practices. The policy on compliance provides a common institutional framework for compliance monitoring, security programme evaluation, lessons learned and best practices. This institutional framework is an essential tool for effective security management across the organizations. With the adoption of this new guidance, the strategic security policy framework has been completely overhauled.

41. In addition, the Department conducted three evaluations of the United Nations security programme, identifying security issues and making recommendations to improve security management processes and outcomes. These evaluations focused on key areas of security management while ensuring the integration of gender considerations. Moreover, the evaluations' results include lessons learned.

2. Enhancing situational awareness and threat and risk analysis

42. Early warning, situational awareness and capacity to analyse security threats and risks remain a core priority. To enhance further security professionals’ expertise on security analysis, in September 2017, the Department commenced a comprehensive training initiative on strategic analysis warning techniques, which focuses on early warning and analysis of violent and unstable environments for senior decision makers. This training continues in 2018. In addition, the Department updated and published guidance on security analysis process and practice, for all security professionals to improve the consistency and quality of analysis on specific security threats.

3. Effective use of specific security risk-management measures

43. The United Nations security management system works to strengthen physical security of United Nations premises, including United Nations Headquarters, offices away from Headquarters, regional commissions and tribunals. During the reporting period, the Department provided operational guidance to 66 different duty stations and on-site assistance to strengthen premise security in 10 locations. This involved the construction of new security features, the refurbishment or upgrading of existing equipment and procedures, and training. At the end of 2018, security professionals will start using a mobile application for “Physical Security Assessment” to identify site vulnerabilities and suggest appropriate security risk management measures to address them. In addition, the Department, in collaboration with key partners, is working to improve standards and guidance on security telecommunications across the system.

44. The Department coordinated 369 complex protective operations in high-threat environments and 2,209 close protection operations for senior officials. With the support of Member States, six close protection units have been deployed in Afghanistan, Libya and Sudan (Darfur). In addition, the United Nations security management system invested in the protection of movement through the acquisition of armoured vehicles. As an example, in the last five years, the Department has almost doubled its fleet of armoured vehicles from 63 to 114 in 2018.

4. Training

45. Security training is one of the most effective measures for the prevention and mitigation of security risks. In various regions of the world, more than 20,000 United Nations personnel, working in or being deployed, to complex security environments, completed the face-to-face course on Safe and Secure Approaches to Field Environments, known as SSAFE during the reporting period. Those trained in SSAFE included, for example, over 600 personnel deployed to Yemen. In the same period, more than 60,000 United Nations personnel across the globe completed the online learning programmes on Basic and Advanced Security in the Field, which constitutes the baseline organizational security culture and awareness programme. The Department has developed a new on-line course titled “BSAFE” that will soon replace both courses with updated information on security procedures and policies.

5. Response to critical incidents

46. Psychosocial support services are invaluable to United Nations personnel affected by critical incidents, and strengthening those services is an integral part of the Organization’s duty of care. From January 2017 to June 2018, the Department, in collaboration with United Nations system organizations, provided psychosocial support to affected personnel in 340 major critical incidents, and delivered 6,860 counselling sessions for personnel in over 40 countries. This effort was undertaken by mobilizing local counselling resources and temporarily deploying six counsellors to the Central African Republic, the Gambia, Mali and Somalia. In 2017, there was an increase of psychosocial services for 14,217 personnel, compared to 12,143 in the previous reporting period. Moreover, the Department provided training for 348 peer helpers and 150 external mental health professionals to build Critical Incident Stress Intervention Cells.
C. United Nations Department of Safety and Security's reform efforts

47. In line with the Secretary-General’s reform vision, the Department has undertaken internal reforms, encompassing management, governance, human resources, budget and performance with a view to provide the most effective security management to enable the delivery of United Nations mandates and programmes.

48. The first stage of strategic reforms was completed in June 2018 and included the integration of the Secretariat’s security resources and responsibilities, a workforce reform anchored on the departmental strategies on human resources, on integrating gender consideration in security management and on security training, as well as the conduct of a workforce planning exercise. In the second stage, the Department is reviewing security funding mechanism and its internal structure to ensure greater effectiveness. These structural reviews are expected to result in increased efficiency and flexibility of existing human and financial resources. Additional reforms would require an ambitious review of the security structures of the United Nations security management system.

49. In addition, in cooperation with the Office of Information and Communications Technology, the Department is seeking ways to enhance security operations with innovative technologies. Efforts are underway to design a mobile application to provide United Nations personnel with access to security travel advisories and information on their security clearance. The electronic travel application, scheduled to be rolled out in early 2019, aims to raise the overall situational awareness of all personnel through the delivery of timely and location-specific security advisories, and to maintain an accurate account of personnel during crisis.

1. Integration of security resources of the Secretariat

50. The Department has worked with the Departments of Management, Political Affairs, Peacekeeping Operations, Field Support and the Office of Legal Affairs to integrate Secretariat’s safety and security personnel and assets under the overall leadership and coordination of the Department. This enables a single Secretariat Department to provide the necessary leadership, management and coordination of all safety and security resources of the Secretariat. This leads to a more professional, mobile, flexible and global “integrated security workforce” with the requisite knowledge, skills and experience to meet the ever-changing demands for security support and services globally. The General Assembly has welcomed this development and has expressed support for integration in resolutions A/70/104, A/71/129, and A/72/131.
51. The completion of the United Nations Secretariat Safety and Security Integration Project in June 2018 was a significant achievement. All Secretariat safety and security personnel, comprising approximately 7,000 personnel across more than 120 duty stations, now operate under the same policy and administrative framework. As an example, the Department improved standards of recruitment, training and operational deployment of protective services personnel deployed globally. An "Interdepartmental Standard Operating Procedures on the Operational Control and Management of Protective Services" has enhanced the delivery of protective services across the board. The Department is now engaged in various efforts to ensure the proper functioning of the integrated security workforce, including a review of the financing and effective deployment of that workforce.

2. Human resources, training and gender strategies for security personnel

52. The Department’s Human Resources Strategy adopted in July 2017 outlines the organizational framework for human resources management for the integrated security workforce, and the culture and values that underpin the integrated security workforce in its daily work to promote a performance management culture. It aims to develop and support a professional and mobile workforce with the knowledge, skills and experience to provide effective safety and security services to the United Nations globally.

53. The Department has developed outreach initiatives and appointed a Gender Coordinator to work towards building a more inclusive organizational culture and to identify opportunities to meet the gender parity goal in line with the United Nations system-wide Action Plan on Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women. The Department strengthened oversight and accountability measures for the advancement of gender equality and the empowerment of women by including gender-related goals in performance management of all its personnel. Moreover, the Department established an annual award to recognize exceptional work in promoting gender equality. Efforts are underway to increase the representation of women in professional grades in the Department with a goal of reaching gender parity by 2028.

54. To bolster the effectiveness of its integrated security workforce in line with the human resources strategy, the Department developed a Learning and Development Strategy for the Integrated Security Workforce in April 2018. Fundamentally changing the business model of training for security personnel, the strategy aims to achieve a more participant-driven learning strategy that allows learners to access content on demand whenever they need it.
D. Building collaborations

1. Enhancing security collaboration between the United Nations and host Governments

55. Effective collaboration and engagement with host Governments remain key components of the United Nations security management in view of the host Governments’ primary responsibility to provide security and protection to United Nations personnel, premises, and assets. The Under-Secretary-General for Safety and Security met with host Government authorities to ensure close collaboration through sharing situational awareness, threat and risk analysis, coordinating prevention and risk mitigation measures, and management of security crisis. The Under-Secretary General for Safety and Security visited 21 countries and held meetings with relevant security authorities.

56. In ensuring the security of United Nations Headquarters, offices away from Headquarters and regional commissions and tribunals, the Department coordinates closely with host country authorities on the protection of these premises. It coordinated specialised security support to 278 external events and conferences sponsored by United Nations system organizations in 108 countries that gathered over 124,010 participants.

2. Fighting against impunity and promoting respect for the human rights, privileges and immunities of United Nations and associated personnel

57. The United Nations continued to make every effort to engage host Governments to protect United Nations personnel deployed on their territories and to ensure respect for the privileges and immunities of United Nations personnel. The Organization continues to encourage Member States to abide by relevant international instruments. To date, only 94 States (a slight increase from 93 States in 2016) are parties to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel (1994) and its Optional Protocol (2005).

58. Following the development of a mechanism to follow-up with host Governments on the status of investigations into fatalities of United Nations personnel owing to violent acts, the Department of Safety and Security, in collaboration with other Secretariat departments and offices, promulgated the Standard Operating Procedure on Victims of Violence Registry for Fatalities in Service in January 2018.
3. Strengthening partnerships with non-governmental organizations (NGO)

59. The United Nations and NGO networks have established a strong partnership through the implementation of the revised “Saving Lives Together” framework. The number of NGOs, international organizations and other partners with “Saving Lives Together” focal points at Headquarters level has doubled since 2013 to 150 currently. To increase outreach and foster better understanding and visibility of the framework, focal points at the United Nations and NGO networks cooperate closely to address common country specific issues. The Department expanded the participation of NGO security managers in the United Nations security professionals’ certification programme.

60. The improvements in collaboration and information sharing facilitated the support to NGOs, including assistance in the relocation and medical evacuation of personnel when feasible. Further initiatives are under way to strengthen the collaboration with NGOs, including through training of Designated Officials.

IV. Strategic challenges

61. Despite the progress in strengthening the United Nations security management system, efforts to enable United Nations operations in the increasingly complex security environment remain challenging. Though the number of deaths resulting from acts of violence in 2017 was the lowest since 2011, the fast-paced changing security environment and the rising demand for security services and operational support continue to stretch the current resources.

62. Within the existing resources, the Organization has fine-tuned its strategic approaches to respond effectively to the changing global security environment to achieve the most effective and efficient use of the Organization’s safety and security resources. The Department has delivered on its strategic priorities: the realignment of its resources; work force planning; integration of the security workforce; improvement of business process; implementing the gender strategy; and the revitalisation of the Trust Fund for Security of Staff Members of the United Nations System (2018-2022).

63. Through its ongoing reform, the Department continues to improve its resource management. There is, however, a continuous need to ensure there are adequate resources that correspond with rising security demands to enable United Nations programme delivery. Although the Department has provided security support to enable increasing United Nations humanitarian programme implementation through its services to the United Nations security management system, there has not been a commensurate increase in security funding compared to the increases in funding for humanitarian life-saving programmes. Following the integration of the Secretariat security workforce, efforts are underway to reassess security funding arrangement in field missions and in the Department.

64. The rising global needs for specialised security operations, services and resources represent unmet demands not covered by current resourcing. In response, the Department has launched the Trust Fund: “Protecting your people and Investment in the United Nations” to allow greater flexibility through the financing of emerging priorities in safety and security. Since the voluntary contributions opened in January 2018, Member States have indicated their support but have yet to provide additional support through the Trust Fund.

V. Observations and recommendations

65. The increasingly complex global security landscape continues to challenge the international community to respond to the dire humanitarian consequences of conflict and instability. To address the underlying political and social challenges that have led to the heightened insecurity, the international community must work together as there is no alternative to multilateralism. Every day, United Nations personnel risk their lives and well-being to fulfil humanitarian, development, human rights, and peace and security mandates across the globe. United Nations and humanitarian personnel, often deployed in hardship conditions, remain the targets of diverse threats from terrorism, crime and armed conflict while providing relief to those in need, and supporting Member States and their populations.

66. In the past 18 months, 35 United Nations personnel and more than 60 NGO humanitarian personnel lost their lives in the line of duty. I am deeply saddened by these deaths and I express my deepest condolences to their bereaved families. In the strongest terms, I condemn all forms of crime and violence against United Nations and humanitarian personnel. The Organization remains undeterred in working towards the values enshrined by the Charter. The best tribute we can pay to these fallen brave men and women is to continue our work; to go to dangerous places with the aim of making them safer, and to stand with and help those who are suffering.
67. I am fully committed to the safety and security of United Nations personnel. Notable increase in the number of abduction and intimidation and harassment of United Nations personnel are causes for concerns. In 2017, eight United Nations personnel, all locally-recruited, were victims of abductions, compared to seven in 2016. The incidence of intimidation and harassment has increased, from 231 in 2016 to 316 in 2017. Also, we have seen a rise in the number of reported sexual assault cases from 17 in 2016 to 28 in 2017, while more than 50 percent of personnel affected were women. Moreover, the number of deaths and injuries related to safety-related incidents affecting United Nations personnel has increased from 11 in 2016 to 13 in 2017; and road crashes remain the number one cause of death for United Nations personnel.

68. On a positive note, in the past three years, we have seen a decline in the overall number of United Nations personnel’ s deaths resulting from violent acts, while the numbers of operations in high-risk environment kept growing. This points to the effectiveness of United Nations security management. The Organization, together with United Nations security management system partners, continue to make strides to enhance the security and safety of United Nations personnel through effective security management policy and compliance, analysis, training and operational support. To sustain this positive development, predictable and adequate resources for security are critical. In that regard, I am calling on Member States and partners to urgently support the UNDSS Trust Fund. I am also calling on Member States and donors to ensure that security costs are an integral part of mandate consideration and planning at the outset as part of a preventive approach for the protection of United Nations personnel.

69. Promoting further the organizational culture which mainstreams the safety and security of United Nations personnel in all aspects of the Organization’s work remains one of my top priorities. In line with my management reform vision, the Department of Safety and Security has initiated internal reform measures to ensure it remains “fit for purpose”. The integration of the Secretariat’s security resources under the authority of the Under-Secretary-General for Safety and Security, the establishment of the Department’s human resources, gender and training strategies, and the continuous realignment of resources constitute significant achievements. The next steps include a review of the security funding mechanism as a priority and to this end, Member States’ continued support remains indispensable.

70. Committed partnership is fundamental for the protection of United Nations and humanitarian personnel. It is the international community’s collective responsibility. I call on Member States to take all necessary measures, including in the deliberations on the United Nations mandates, to ensure the protection of United Nations and humanitarian personnel. This is critical for the continuation and success of United Nations operations. I wish to underscore the host Governments' primary responsibility in the protection of United Nations and humanitarian personnel in accordance with the relevant international legal instruments. At the same time, the commitment of all parties, including non-state actors, are essential for the protection of United Nations and humanitarian personnel particularly in conflict situations.

71. I am deeply concerned with the continuous erosion, in many cases, of respect for the principles and rules of international law, in particular international humanitarian law. Impunity for crimes committed against United Nations personnel and humanitarian personnel remains a serious cause of concerns. I urge the host Governments and their relevant national authorities to take timely adequate action to bring to justice those perpetrators who committed crimes against United Nations and humanitarian personnel. The United Nations rely on Member States to undertake credible investigations of all crimes and acts of violence committed against United Nations personnel within their jurisdictions. Moreover, I urge Member States to act against the obstruction to freedom of movements of United Nations personnel and humanitarian personnel.

72. I wish to recommend that the General Assembly remain engaged on the issue of the safety and security of United Nations personnel and continue to provide full support to the United Nations security management system.
