Strengthening the monitoring and review framework of the post-2015 development agenda:
Who should be accountable and how?

The Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals has tabled its final proposal for SDGs as part of the successor framework to the Millennium Development Goals. There has been a substantial investment of time and effort from Member States and stakeholders in developing the substance of these goals and targets. At the same time, discussions have been progressing on how a new set of goals can be implemented effectively. A critical question within this is who should be accountable for the post-2015 development agenda, and how?

Based on the MDG experience it is clear that robust monitoring and review mechanisms for the post-2015 development agenda will be essential to ensure that a new set of commitments translate to the necessary actions to deliver results on the ground. It will be essential to establish a review framework that builds on existing mechanisms at the global, regional, national and local levels, and which is robust and clearly defined, in order to ensure effective monitoring of all new goals and targets. Therefore, this event aims to address the following questions:

What will be the key priorities for building an effective post-2015 monitoring & review framework? Who should be accountable and how?

What are the key lessons that can be drawn from experiences of existing accountability mechanisms that might be relevant for the post-2015 framework?

What are the next steps that could be taken at this stage in the post-2015 process to ensure a strong monitoring & review framework for the post-2015 agenda?
