

By 2016, gender balance could be achieved across the United Nations system.

This would require only a 2 per cent annual increase. At the current rate of growth, it will take another 21 years for this goal to be realized.

The United Nations General Assembly set the target of gender balance by the year 2000. This is now 13 years past due and women currently make up just 40.7 per cent of staff.

By 2011, only FIVE entities had achieved gender balance: ICJ, PAHO, UNFPA, UNICEF & UNWOMEN

2016 The year in which gender balance will be reached across the UN system IF there is an annual increase of 2 percentage

2024 The year in which gender parity will be reached across the UN system at the current rate of growth
