

THE GLOBAL YOUTH CALL

“Prioritizing Youth in the Post-2015 Development Agenda”

This Call reflects an emerging global consensus on concrete proposals for target areas on youth in the post-2015 development agenda. It is based on the top five thematic priorities of over 1.3 million young people who voted in the MyWorld2015 survey out of a total 2.1 Million respondents – Education, Employment and Entrepreneurship, Health, Good Governance, and Peace and Stability. Convened by the Office of the UN Secretary-General’s Envoy on Youth, a team of youth-led organizations and UN entities worked from January 2014 to May 2014 to consolidate the proposed target areas with the participation of:

- Over 1700 youth organizations in the Crowdsourcing Platform of the Global Partnership on Youth in the Post-2015 Development Agenda,ⁱ
- The UN Major Group on Children and Youth,
- Global networks of international NGOs, youth organizations and regional youth platforms, including the International Coordination Meeting of Youth Organisations (ICMYO, a network of 26 international youth-led NGOs and regional youth platforms), and the Alliance for International Youth Development (AIYD) (a coalition of 24-international non-profit, private organizations, and foundations),
- United Nations Inter-agency Network on Youth Development (IANYD, consisting of 40 UN entities).
- Intergovernmental organizations: The Commonwealth and Ibero-American Youth Organization (OIJ)
- National youth structures, including National Youth Councils,

And building on:

- Ideas submitted by participants of the Crowdsourcing Platform
- Outcomes of recent national, regional and global youth consultations, fora and meetings (See Annex)
- UN Development Group National and Global Thematic Consultations on Post-2015
- The Colombo Declaration on Youth made at the World Conference on Youth and its call for a standalone goal, clear targets and indicators on youth

The Global Partnership for Youth in the Post-2015 Development Agenda and the signatories of this call invite Member States to incorporate the following youth-focused target areas in the post-2015 development agenda:

- Ensure universal access to quality primary and post-primary education and expand equitable access to tertiary education
- Ensure all young people achieve recognized and measurable learning outcomes with quality formal, non-formal and vocational education and training that equips them with the relevant knowledge and skills to lead safe, healthy and productive lives, to meet the demands of the job market and to foster global citizenship.
- Reduce the number of youth not in employment, education or training and increase access to decent work and livelihoods amongst young people by providing access to learning opportunities, putting in place school-to-work transition policies, strengthening public private partnerships for better skills-matching, enhance access to financial and non-financial services to increase opportunities for youth-led entrepreneurship, and promote inclusive and sustainable economic growth.

#GPY2015

The Global Partnership for Youth in the Post-2015 Agenda

- Ensure young people's meaningful and inclusive participation in decision making processes, governance and peacebuilding, and develop, implement and adequately fund cross-sectorial youth policies and review mechanisms, in the framework of the World Programme of Action for Youth
- Improve the physical, social and mental health of adolescents and youth, promote healthy behaviours for reducing the risk of Non-Communicable Diseases and substance abuse, and increase access to affordable, acceptable and quality-assured adolescent- and youth-friendly health services and information
- Ensure universal access to sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights, including HIV, modern methods of contraceptives, and comprehensive education on human sexuality, with a particular focus on adolescent girls;
- Promote human rights and gender equality and eliminate all forms of violence and discrimination against adolescents and youth, including adolescent girls and young women, including child, early and forced marriage and harmful practices.
- Strengthen collection and analysis of data on adolescents and youth, disaggregated by age, sex and marital status, to promote monitoring, evaluation, accountability and transparency and support advocacy and policy making.

Let's remember, the world's demographic and development realities mean that the success of the post-2015 development agenda hinges on fulfilling the human rights and meeting the development needs of all young people. Connected to each other like never before, they are driving social progress, inspiring political change and building resilience. Countries with populations composed of large proportions of adolescents and youth can reap a demographic dividend for national development, resilience and sustainability, by investing fully in young people. Countries will need to promote human rights, eliminate all forms of discrimination, address all forms of inequalities, including gender inequality, so adolescents and youth can reach their full potential and in turn shape the development of their families, communities, and countries. Young people – their experience of engagement or of alienation, their inclusion or their marginalization – will determine whether their societies prosper or fail.

Let's ensure, as the global community gathers to review progress made towards the Millennium Development Goals and puts forth an ambitious and achievable vision for the Post-2015 Development Agenda and Sustainable Development Goals, that youth priorities and targets are duly included. Equity and equality must be at the centre of the Post-2015 Development Agenda. Investing in young people – particularly the marginalised - could ensure the success of the agenda more than anything else. A failure to do so could jeopardize it altogether. The Secretary-General's Envoy on Youth, in partnership with the United Nations entities and all the signatories of the Global Youth Call, urge the international community to put young people at the centre of this agenda. The time for action is now.

Young people today...

- With 1.8 billion strong, the world is home to the largest generation of young people aged 10 to 24 in its history
- Close to 90 percent of the world's youth live in developing countries, where they tend to make up the largest proportion of the population
- More than 500 million youth aged 15 to 24 live on less than $2 a day
- Some 74 million youth are unemployed, and more than 600 million jobs need to be generated globally by the year 2030
- Young people aged 15 to 24 people are almost three times more likely than older segments of the population to be unemployed, and in some countries the youth unemployment rate exceeds 50 per cent
- Some 69 million adolescents of lower secondary school age remain out of school
- In developing countries, 1 in 3 girls is married before her 18th birthday and across the world, more than half of all sexual assaults take place against girls younger than 16
- 1.5 billion persons, the majority of them under the age of 30, live in conflict or in fragile situations
- Young people are under-represented and excluded in decision-making processes: Fewer than 2% of parliamentarians around the world are in their 20s and only 12% are in their 30s.

Despite significant progress made since the MDGs were adopted, this generation of young people has been left behind. They are still denied the opportunities that they need to realize their full potential

SUMMARY OF OUTCOMES: FROM CONSULTATION TO CONSOLIDATION YOUTH PRIORITIES

Education:

Ensuring basic literacy and numeracy skills for young people in low-income countries could lift 171 million people out of povertyⁱⁱ, resulting in a 12 per cent cut in global poverty. Despite large gains made in primary education in the past decade, 69 million adolescents of lower secondary school age remain out-of-school. These efforts are further undermined by the low quality of education systems: over 250 million children of primary school age are unable to read or write even after four years of schooling. In the least developed countries, one quarter of young men aged 15 to 24 and one third of young women aged 15 to 24 are illiterateⁱⁱⁱ. Yet, educational outcomes for youth have a direct impact on economic growth and stability: ensuring adolescent girls complete education beyond primary level, for example, could add 1.5% per year to the GDP of countries, while ensuring their participation in the job market through education and training could add up to 4.4% per year. The following have been identified as key target areas for education with a focus on the most marginalized^{iv}:

- Ensure universal access to quality primary and post-primary education and expand equitable access to tertiary education;
- Ensure all young people achieve recognised and measurable learning outcomes at all levels, made possible through the provision of safe, relevant and quality education by a sufficient number of adequately and well-trained, supported teachers and education infrastructure;
- Ensure all young people have access to quality formal, non-formal and vocational education and training, which can be provided through governments and partnerships with civil society organisations, private sector and youth organisations as to equip them with the relevant knowledge and skills to lead healthy and productive lives, to meet the demands of the job market and to foster global citizenship;
- Ensure access to technical and vocational education and training, ICT, comprehensive education on human sexuality and life-skills, human rights, peacebuilding, sustainability, entrepreneurial skills, global citizenship, and education for sustainable development and lifelong learning opportunities;
- Increase national budget allocation to education and strengthen the accountability and responsiveness of national governments.

Employment and Entrepreneurship:

In 2013, nearly 200 million people were unemployed, of which some 74 million were between the ages of 15 and 24. Young people aged 15-24 are almost three times more likely than older sections of the population to be unemployed, and in some countries the youth unemployment rate exceeds 50 per cent. The share of young people not in employment, education or training (NEETs) has grown in a majority of countries for which data exists and informal employment remains pervasive for young people in many developing economies. Currently youth often lack access to existing jobs due to lack of work experience and social capital, poor educational preparation, relevant skills training or mentorship. Young entrepreneurs face similar obstacles, including access to adequate and relevant information, the lack of access to financial services, skills training and support in the pre- and post-creation phases when setting up and managing their own businesses. It is estimated that from 2015 to 2030, the global economy will need to create more than 600 million jobs to contain the current spread of unemployment and cope with the growth in the working age population. As 9 out of 10 jobs are created by the private sector, it will be of paramount importance to strengthen and promote the development of a sound private sector to ensure inclusive and sustainable economic growth, including through industrialization, while respecting the planetary boundaries and ensuring the efficient use of resources. The quest for decent work and livelihood opportunities is a universal concern that affects young people in all countries and communities. The post-2015 development agenda should make decent and productive work for young people a reality. Moving away from exploitive work and unpaid traineeships/internships and towards a decent work, which fulfils international standards and ensures equal pay for work of equal value. The following have been identified as key target areas to promote productive and decent work for young people, in particular young women and reduce the number of youth not in employment, education or training:

- Increase employment rates of young women and men, with targeted measures for disadvantaged youth, by putting in place school-to-work transition policies;
- Ensure a better match between the skills of young people and the changing needs of the labour market, by strengthening partnerships between governments, social partners, educators and the private sector;
- Provide access to learning opportunities to develop knowledge and skills, including professional, technical, entrepreneurial and vocational training, for work and life, as well as information on business opportunities, new markets and national/international networks of investors
- Ensure young entrepreneurs' access to tailor-made financial and assistance in pre- and post-creation phases;
- Ensure equality, including gender equality at work, including eliminating the gender pay-gap;
- Ensure universal global access to adequate social protection, including social protection floors, and decent work and livelihoods for young people in the formal and informal sector in accordance with ILO labour standards.

Health:

Adolescence is a critical life stage characterized by rapid physical, emotional and social development, during which every person develops the capabilities required for a productive, healthy and satisfying life. Health and development during this period affects health in adult years. Nearly two thirds of premature deaths and one third of the total disease burden in adults are associated with conditions or behaviours that began in youth, including tobacco use, a lack of physical activity, unprotected sex or exposure to violence^v. Globally, approximately 20% of youth aged 15-24 experience a mental health condition each year. An estimated 1.3 million adolescents died in 2012, mostly from preventable or treatable diseases. According to the "Health of the World's Adolescents,"^{vi} the top three causes of death among adolescents include road traffic accidents. An estimated 1.3 million adolescents died in 2012, mostly from preventable or treatable diseases. and suicide. Young girls continue to carry the heaviest burden of death and disability due to complications relating to pregnancy and childbirth, including unsafe abortions, with complications relating to pregnancy and childbirth the leading cause of death among 15 to 19 year old girls in low and middle income countries. In order to ensure all adolescents and youth enter adulthood with the highest attainable standard of physical, social and mental health, the following have been identified as key target areas for health:

- Ensure universal access to affordable, acceptable and quality adolescent-and-youth friendly health services and information;
- Ensure universal access to sexual and reproductive health, reproductive rights and HIV services, and modern methods of contraceptives, with a particular focus on adolescent girls;
- Ensure early detection, treatment of and support for mental health issues among adolescents and youth;
- Improve the health status of adolescents and youth by putting in place prevention programmes targeting adolescents and youth including violence, accidents, injuries and early detection and treatment of mental health issues amongst adolescents and youth;
- Increase investment to promote healthy behaviours and health promotion programmes aimed at reducing risk of non-communicable diseases, tobacco use, obesity, violence and the burden of road traffic injuries and harm reduction for substance abuse, including drug use and alcohol;
- Recognize the social and political determinants of health and address all social, economic and political inequality and exclusion as a way to improve the health and well-being of adolescents and youth.

Peace and personal security:

Peaceful, inclusive and safe societies require the participation and engagement of young people. Young people are over-represented among the direct and indirect victims of violence – whether criminality, terrorism or armed conflict. Globally, 43% of homicide victims are aged 15-29. Across the world, more than half of all sexual assaults take place against girls younger than 16. In conflict-affected countries, rates of violence against young people are often higher. Young women and men are at increased risks of physical and sexual abuse and exploitation, and are disproportionately targeted for recruitment by armed forces/groups for use as (child) soldiers and trafficked for exploitative labour or sexual exploitation. They are also subjected to the trauma of losing family, friends and community; education and livelihood opportunities. Only 20% of secondary school-aged refugees are enrolled in secondary school. Humanitarian and development efforts seldom target young people, who are rarely allowed to participate in decisions affecting their lives. Yet young people's roles in preventing and resolving conflict, violence and extremism are essential to achieving sustainable peace. The following have been identified as key target areas for peaceful and stable societies:

- Eliminate all forms of violence against children and youth, including in schools, the household, public spaces, detention centres and online.;
- End all forms of violence and discrimination against girls and young women, including sexual violence, child, early and forced marriage and harmful practices, trafficking and other forms of gender-based violence;
- Promote young people's participation as an essential condition for safe and secure societies;
- Ensure that humanitarian and development efforts address young people's needs and protect their human rights;
- Ensure that all young people participate in peace and human rights education, either through formal or non-formal education, and have access to opportunities for cross-cultural exchange and volunteerism;

#GPY2015

The Global Partnership for Youth in the Post-2015 Agenda

- Ensure equitable distribution of development gains to young people to promote safe, peaceful and secure societies.

Governance and Participation:

“Governance” has been identified as a high priority issue by young people, who want to see governments effectively held to account, and governance structures where young people have access and contribute to decision making processes. Concerns around corruption feature strongly in global consultations, together with transparency and accountability. Young people are not represented adequately in formal and political institutions and processes, such as parliaments, political parties, electoral processes and public administrations. Despite the fact that young people disproportionately face poverty and constitute a significant proportion of the population in low-income countries, 2 out of 3 countries do not consult young people as a part of the process of preparing poverty reduction strategies or national development plans. Good governance and the rule of law require the meaningful participation of young people, and in particular young women, in decision-making at all levels, including in the planning, implementation and monitoring of policies and programmes, with young people as partners and leaders in development. Improved information and communication technology is making it easier for young people to collect and access data and increase transparency and accountability in decision-making. At local and national level Youth Councils should continue to play an important role in bringing together young people and decision makers and best practice of co-decision and co-management, appropriate to each body, needs to be further developed at all levels. The following have been identified as key target areas:

- Strengthen inclusive participation of young people, especially young women) in governance and decision-making processes at the local, national, regional and global levels;
- Develop, implement and adequately fund cross-sectorial youth policies that are evidence-based and include participatory, monitoring and evaluation on a regular basis in accordance with the World Programme for Action on Youth;
- Ensure the right to information, association, and freedom of speech and opinion, for all, including marginalised youth;
- Strengthen youth-led movements, networks and organisations and improve their access to institutions that affect the lives of young people;
- Encourage and support youth civic engagement and volunteerism for development, including by ensuring education on and awareness of human rights and development;
- Strengthen effective, transparent and accountable institutions at all levels;
- Support and promote increased and equitable access to open, timely, reliable, accessible and quality information, including through ICTs to enable stronger accountability mechanisms and greater youth participation in decision making.
- Ensure that youth are meaningfully involved in global and national monitoring mechanisms to ensure accountability for commitments made in the post-2015 framework
